Girls tennis on a roll

Showdown looming with Norwell

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The undefeated Cohasset girls tennis team has only one obstacle remaining in its quest for the South Shore League championship.

That obstacle is Norwell, who has only one league loss, and is the class of the league along with the Skippers. Cohasset (5-0) and Norwell have yet to tangle this season due to rainouts, and are set to renew their rivalry today (Wednesday) at Norwell.

Coach Gigi Meehan was actually excited about the rainouts of the last couple weeks, because she only missed one of her team's matches while on vacation in Italy. She said she didn't want to miss the Norwell match for anything.

"It's going to be a fantastic match," she said. "Norwell's only league defeat was to Norton, and they were missing most of their team. It's going to be a very even match."

At first singles, Cohasset senior captain Kate Stone will take on Norwell's outstanding sophomore, Sara Bitetti. Last year, Bitetti defeated Stone both times they played, but Meehan thinks Stone is capable of an upset this time around.

"Sara's ranked in New England and she's a tremendous player, but Kate's playing the best she's ever played, and she's been my number one player for five years," Meehan said. "I think Kate's experience is really going to help her. She's mentally ready. She'll give Sara a great match."

At second singles, Meehan has a tremendous player in freshman Lindsay Grossman, whose athleticism has been a spark for the Skippers.

"I predict she'll go undefeated," Meehan said of Grossman, who has yet to drop a match this season. "She hits the ball so beautifully. She was torn between track and tennis, and I'm sure glad she chose to play tennis. She's a great player."

"It's been a great season so far."
Girls tennis coach Gigi Meehan

Cohasset's third singles player, Julie Shea, is also undefeated on the season. The combination of stone, Grossman and Shea in singles has been unbeatable so far this season.

"We're very fortunate to have three players who are not only good athletes and can move around the court, but they have great ground strokes as well," Meehan said.

Junior Ary Afshar and senior Jessie Zerendow team at first doubles, and have lost only twice this season, both times to the very athletic Hanover pair of Kelly Sarson and Nilah Pendian. Meehan said the pair will need to be on their game to gain a point against Norwell.

"Ary could probably be our third singles, but she's such a good doubles player," Meehan said. "Jessie is also so steady. Against Hanover, they tried to hit the ball by those girls at the net, but those two are very good athletes. It would have served them better to hit easy lobs. As long as they play their game, they'll do very well."

The second doubles pairing of senior Jessica Niessink and sophomore Kelly Stone is also undefeated on the season and will prove a tough matchup for Norwell.

"Those two just have a great partnership," Meehan said. "They really like playing with each other and they work so well together. They're really starting to understand how to play doubles."

Cohasset has another match with Norwell on May 23 as well as a match against Abington. If the Skippers win two out of those three, or even sweep, they will be assured of a fairly high seed in the state tournament, which gets underway the first week in June.

Meehan said tournament play is much different than competition in the South Shore League.

"We have a very weak, very small league," she said. "Hull doesn't have a team, and most of the others in the league just aren't at our level. It would be nice to be in the top of the draw, so we can have a couple of easy matches. I'd like to see us get into the third round."

The Skippers haven't played any non-league matches this year against the better teams around, such as Patriot League teams Scituate and Hingham. Meehan said she didn't expect her team to be nearly as good as it is.

"I knew we'd have a small squad, so I kind of took it easy when scheduling," she said. "Last year, we played Scituate and got thoroughly thumped. But we're a lot more solid this year than I had anticipated when making the schedule. The girls work so hard. It's been a great season so far."

such as lacrosse, baseball, tennis and golf, it can be difficult for a school as small as Cohasset to have the depth necessary to score enough second and third-place finishes to compete.

"Carver doesn't have lacrosse and they're a bigger school, so they've got a much larger team than we do," LaFountain said. "Against Carver, we won eight first, and they won nine. It was the second and third places that killed us."

In the Carver meet, Baird won the mile and triple jump, while Maitland won the javelin and took second in the 800-meter run. Krupczak and Parker swept the 100 and 200-meter dashes, and both were also members of the victorious 4x100-meter relay squad. Dan Kinchler also took five big points with his win in the two-mile.

An amazing number of Cohasset track athletes have qualified for the state meet, to be held in Norwell on Memorial Day weekend.

Krupczak, who hasn't lost in the 200-meter dash in two years, has qualified in that event as well as the long jump, triple jump, 100-meter dash and 4x100-meter relay. Because athletes are only allowed to enter one track event, one field event and a relay at the state meet, Krupczak will run the 200-meter dash, long jump, and take part in the 4x100-meter relay.

Parker is also a multiple qualifier, having met the state standards in the shot put, discus, 100-meter dash, 200-meter dash, and 4x100-meter relay.

Madyun will take part in the 100-meter dash, and 4x100-meter relay, while Maitland (javelin and high jump) and Baird (mile and triple jump) will also compete in two events.

Other qualifiers are Robin Cunningham (110-meter hurdles), Vanderweil (110-meter hurdles), Laney (4x100-meter relay) and Kinchler (two-mile).

"Our program has really taken off," LaFountain said. "Last year, we also went 5-1 in the league. Hopefully, the younger kids will see that. Kids always want to be part of a winning team."

Boys' lacrosse drops three close games

An 11-7 defeat at the hands of Marshfield on Tuesday and a pair of heartbreaking losses last week, both in overtime, leave the Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team still needing two wins to qualify for MIAA postseason play.

Cohasset stands 6-7 on the season, with three games left. The Skippers host non-league rival Milton on Friday night at 7 p.m.

Against Marshfield, Cohasset fell behind early, but rallied with a run at the end of the first half to keep the game close throughout. Ronan Buick and Jason Moore both had two goals in the loss.

Last Tuesday, at Sandwich, the Skippers mounted their best comeback of the year, with freshman attackman Curt Kahn and sophomore Pete Kovach combining on four goals in the final seven minutes to erase a 9-5 deficit.

Kahn, who had five goals on the day, and Kovach, with a goal and six assists, nearly connected again in both the first and second overtimes, but were denied by Sandwich goalie Ronnie Westgate.

Late in the second overtime, an errant clearing pass caught sophomore goalie Kyle Weber, who had 11 saves on the day, out of the net and Sandwich picked up the victory.

"We didn't play well the first half," said Coach Paul Sporn, whose team trailed 7-2 going into the third quarter, "but we improved in the third, and the final period was almost surreal."

Other Cohasset scorers were Buick, and sophomores Paul Previte and Moore.

The Skippers suffered again on Friday, dropping a 6-5 thriller to Norwell, whose Jay Williams netted the game-winner with 12 seconds left.

Cohasset erased a 2-0 first-quarter deficit, and led for most of the second half in the defensive struggle. Seniors Brad Powell and Bill Good, and junior Greg Figureido effectively shut down the Norwell attack, and Kovach, Kahn, Moore and Buick peppered the Norwell goalie.

Kahn and Buick would finish the game with a pair of goals each, while Kovach had a goal and three assists.

But late in the fourth quarter, some poor passing and decision making led to a turnover that gave Norwell the tie. And after Weber stopped four Norwell shots early in OT, the Skipper defense was caught out of position on the game-winner.

"A bitter disappointment," said Coach Sporn. "This is a game I expected to win, and thought we should have won."

Skippers, their longest of the season. Cohasset improved to 8-8 for the season with the win.

During the five-game losing streak, Cohasset bats were very quiet. Monday's win marked the first time since the Skippers were 7-3 that they scored five runs in a game.

"None of us have an explanation for it," said junior pitcher Tim Grassey, "but we were in the toughest part of our schedule against some really tough teams."

Despite the recent losses to strong Carver and Nantucket squads, there were some bright spots over the slide. Sophomore Robin Murphy has hit .462 (6 for13) over the last four games.

"I have been focusing a little better," said Murphy, whose sacrifice ground ball in the second inning set up Cohasset's first run of the game against Hull. "I have been more in a groove than the beginning of the season. But I would rather take an 0 for 50 and get those four or five wins," he added.

Another area of strength for the Skippers has been their solid defense. Cohasset has committed only three errors over the last four games.

"One error a game? I'd take that any day of the week," said Coach Knurek, while in the midst of the skid. "Our pitching has been as strong as ever, we just haven't been able to get the big hit at the right time."

The defense was again tremendous against Hull, as O'Keeffe made a spectacular diving catch in left field in the first inning to rob Hull of an extra- base hit. Bolster was terrific playing defense on the mound, and made a shoestring catch on a bunt that was popped up.

Cohasset is now fourth in the South Shore League, behind Norwell, whose record stands at 8-1, and Norton and Carver, who are tied at 5-3.

The Skippers now face Abington and Norwell, both teams having played very competitive games against Cohasset the first time around the schedule.

Cohasset needs just two more wins in order to qualify for the postseason tournament.

"Every team [we play for the rest of the season] is beatable," said Knurek. "There are no powerhouses left on the schedule."

After a very fast start to the season, Cohasset is hoping to regain its balance, and close out the season with a strong effort.

minute of the second half.

Sophomore Kristin Sheerin, who is among the top goal scorers in the league this season, threw in four goals.

Senior captain Jenny Chastain had two goals, and sophomore Suzanne Lynner and freshman Yasmine Afshar scored one apiece.

Freshman Gia Petrakis had a solid outing as goal keeper, collecting 17 saves, including two penalty shot saves.

"Gia has been excellent as a freshman," said first year coach Kathy Fahey.

Sandwich ran their record to 10-3, while Cohasset, the smallest school in the league, dropped to three wins, seven losses, and two ties.

Last Tuesday, Cohasset showed its improvement in the second half of the season by tying powerful Martha's Vineyard 10-10 behind four-goal games from Chastain and Sheerin.

The Vineyard, which had beaten Cohasset by eight goals earlier in the season, led for most of the game. But a second-half surge triggered by Chastain, Sheerin and Kahn put the Lady Skippers in front 10-9.

A last-minute goal by the Vineyarders salvaged the tie for the visitors.

"We played well, and senior Caitlin Stansell, who's really coming on, was a standout on defense," said Fahey. "Petrakis was strong in goal, with 20 saves. She's probably been our most pleasant surprise all season."

The Lady Skippers' second game of the week was against defending South champs Hingham. The Harbormen dominated the first half, but Cohasset outscored their hosts 3-1 in the second half to salvage a moral victory in the 14-3 loss.

"They're very strong, but we never quit and had some nice plays in the second half," said Fahey. "With three of our last four games of the season being at home, I'm hoping we'll finish on a high note."

Despite the losing record, Fahey has been very pleased with the amount of effort coming from each player.

"They are a great bunch of girls," she said. "Every player has improved since the beginning of the year."

Cohasset's lack of experience has been a main contributor to the Skippers' subpar record. With such a young team (20 out of 27 players being either freshmen or sophomores), Coach Fahey has looked to seniors Kahn, Chastain and Carolyn Cameron for strong leadership.

"They have been like assistant coaches to me," praised Fahey, who does not have the benefit of a junior varsity team for the first-year players this season.

"We work with them [the underclassmen] one on one on basic fundamentals," said Cameron.

Jackie Kahn's father, Terry Kahn, is a volunteer assistant coach who spends most of his time working with goalie Petrakis.

The loss to Sandwich, coupled with last week's loss to Hingham, put Cohasset on the brink of elimination from postseason play. They now need to win all four of their remaining games in order to qualify.

However, even if the Skippers fail to make the playoffs, they have a very bright future. With the abundance of talent coming out of ninth and tenth grade, and over twenty girls in the Middle School program, the next few years of girls lacrosse should be one of the bright spots in the Cohasset athletics department.

"When our [current] sophomores are seniors, we will really be in the running," Fahey said.

Lacrosse Spirit Day set for Friday

On Friday, May 19, the Cohasset girls' varsity will play Scituate in a special exhibition game on Alumni Field that will begin at 5 p.m. as part of Cohasset's annual Lacrosse Spirit Day.

Other games on May 19 at Alumni Field include a boys' middle school contest starting at 3 p.m., and a boys' varsity game beginning at 7 p.m. against Milton High.

The Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters will be selling food and other refreshments throughout the afternoon and evening.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Bourke L. Corcoran scholarship offered

On June 7, during senior class night, a senior girl and boy each will be awarded the $1,500 Bourke L. Corcoran Scholarship. To qualify for scholarship, students are asked to write an essay on the true meaning of friendship.

The scholarship committee judges each applicant anonymously and only on the merit of their thoughts on friendship. Bourke's friendship was deeply appreciated by those he called friend. One of them had this to say, "Bourke influenced my life with honesty and compassion. He always gave me more than he took. The friendship we shared and the memories we made will never leave me. Bourke and I shared a friendship that many people search for all their lives because his love was given freely. Hopefully, those who were touched by him will pass on his love and caring. In memory of Bourke, I know I will strive to do so."

The committee for the Bourke L. Corcoran Scholarship Fund congratulates the Class of 2000. Anyone interested in contributing to this worthy scholarship can send their donation to: The Bourke L. Corcoran Scholarship Fund, Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA. 02025.

Last year's recipients were Tara Hettstrom and Justin Golden. Tara is a member of the National Society of Collegiate Scholars at Boston College and Justin is an honors student and a member of the football team at Harvard University.

Last year's recipients of the Bourke L. Corcoran scholarship were Tara Hettstrom and Justin Golden.

Edward Wilder House provides window into history

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

If you stand under the eaves in the attic of the Edward Wilder House in South Hingham, history literally passes before your eyes. For, it is up in that aerie that you see how the venerable homestead has grown during the years. Three roof beams, at increasingly higher angles, indicate that the roof was raised three times, first, when it began as a small pilgrim cottage in 1650, then as a saltbox, in the mid-1800s, and finally as the splendid four-square Colonial it is today.

Tucked away on almost two acres of land between Friend and High streets, the Wilder House is one of five antique homes included in the Hingham Historical Society's 76th Annual House Tour June 14.

In its present state the house is a grand blending of the old and the new — a 350-year-old work-in-progress that provides various clues throughout to the changes that have been made by various owners. A ceiling beam in the spacious living room signals where the oldest section of the house ends and a new one begins; the over-sized fireplace — it's beehive oven long ago lost to a necessary furnace — in the den off the entrance foyer suggests that the room originally functioned as the kitchen of the little 17-century cottage.

The current owners, Andrea and Randy Young, who will have the house blessed June 17 to commemorate its 350th birthday, have maintained the home's ancient charm by decorating it appropriately. Leaving the dark wood floors bare, and using soft earth-toned colors, as well as small-patterned fabrics and wallpapers, in the few rooms they've chosen to paper instead of paint, the couple has created in the house a sense of stepping back in time. That is enhanced by the pieces of furniture they've chosen, including an exquisite and rare 17th-century lantern clock, a purchase of Randy Young, who is an ardent collector of clocks. In light of that fact, it is interesting to note that next door to Edward Wilder another Wilder once lived, Joshua, a famous clockmaker. Such a coincidence only serves to underscore the Youngs' feeling of connection to the old house. That feeling is strengthened by the memorabilia left behind by previous owners, including papers and pictures that describe the house's progression over the years.

Among the most interesting of these artifacts is a tattered novel, written by Jane Austin, and published in 1888, titled "The Nameless Nobleman." A romance, the book tells the story of Mary Wilder, the youngest of the 11 children of Edward and Elizabeth Wilder, who, in 1695, married Dr. Francis Le Baron, once a surgeon aboard a French privateer that had sunk in Cape Cod Bay. Though Austin changed the locale and embellished facts to create a tale of intrigue and mystery, a contemporary newspaper article sets the record straight: "The scene of this story is laid in Falmouth. But the present Wilder place in South Hingham was the home of Mary Wilder, and it was here, doubtless, beneath the shelter of her father's roof, that she first met Le Baron." The article goes on to comment rather dryly: "The author's relation of the various experiences of Le Baron and his 'guardian angel' form a more entertaining story than the known facts of history."

The Youngs and their 12-year-old twins have lived in the Wilder House since December, 1997, confining most of their changes to the outdoors, says Andrea. Beyond the handsome entrance portico added in the 1920s, a broad swath of lawn surrounded by trees makes the property seem more isolated and remote than it actually is. Though bordering bustling Main Street, the grounds are as quiet as they must have been when that busy thoroughfare was a dirt path. Andrea Young has taken advantage of this bucolic splendor by creating next to the house a patio area whose centerpiece is a lovely waterfall. Completing this dramatic setting is a structure that has been on the property since at least 1875. A fine complement to the main house with its Colonial lines and cupolaed roof, this outbuilding today serves as a guest house and workshop.

In addition to the five homes on the Hingham Historical 76th Annual House Tour, several other sites of historical significance will be open to visitors. Those include two buildings owned by the historical society, Old Derby, the site of the oldest coeducational school in the country, and the Old Ordinary, a house museum that has a fine collection of antique artifacts and from June 14 on will present a special exhibition, "Bevy of Brides," composed of 19th- and early 20th-century wedding gowns. Other points of interest are the Old Ship Meeting House, the oldest church of continuous worship in the United States; the Memorial Bell Tower, adjacent to the meeting house; St. Paul's Church in downtown Hingham, whose rectory is listed as the oldest house in Hingham because it contains elements of the 1640 Albert Fearing House, and Hingham Cemetery, where many of the town's earliest settlers are buried.

The tour runs from 1 to 8:30 p.m., June 14. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 on tour day. They are available in advance at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square and at the Hingham Public Library on Leavitt Street. To order tickets by mail, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a check for the number of tickets required to: Hingham Historical Society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham, MA 02043. Mark the envelope "House Tour." Tickets the day of the tour will be sold only at the Old Ordinary, 21 Lincoln St., beginning at 10 a.m. At that time too, tickets purchased in advance can be exchanged for tour books. Light refreshments will be served at one of the houses. No cameras or spike heels are allowed. For information, call (781) 749-2731 or 749-0664.

Accident at 'bad' intersection

For police it was a case of déjà vu.

There was another accident at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A Saturday that occurred under similar circumstances to one two weeks ago.

A car heading north on Rte. 3A turned left onto Beechwood and was struck by a vehicle travelling south on the inside lane on Rte. 3A.

"The vehicle travelling south didn't see the other vehicle," safety officer Rick Yocum said. There were no injuries.

The driver of the 1988 Dodge sedan making the left was cited for failure to grant the right of way. The other vehicle involved was a 2000 Lincoln sedan.

Yocum said the intersection is dangerous.

"The way it is set up when you get heavy traffic, the people can't see the inside lane," he said. "You have to be very careful when turning to make sure you have a clear right of way."

Yocum said he'd like to see arrows installed at the lights there.

ART NOTES

Art with a View

South Shore Art Center Popular Garden Sculpture Tour Expands to Two Towns and Two Days!

The South Shore Art Center's artistic garden tour, "Art with a View," will occur on Friday, May 19, and Saturday, May 20, running from 10 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon both days. The tour will feature four estates in Cohasset and four estates in Hingham. In Cohasset, two of the homes are located on Main Street adjacent to Cohasset Common and Little Harbor, while two are on Border Street along the Gulf River. In Hingham, three of the homes are on lower Main Street near Hingham Square, and one is off Martin's Lane facing Hingham Harbor and World's End. Twenty of the most accomplished sculptors in New England have loaned works to be placed amidst the landscaped grounds and gardens, and 24 well-known artists will be working on paintings on site throughout the event.

Art with a View will culminate with a black-tie dinner and art auction on Saturday evening, May 20. All of the paintings created during the course of the two days will be framed and available for purchase. This gala garden party will occur at a private home in Hingham, with décor, menu, and music presenting a Tuscany summer theme.

The event will offer art lovers and garden lovers a rare chance to observe the creation of landscape paintings and to enjoy sculptures installed in secluded settings of great natural beauty. Proceeds from Art with a View will support the operating expenses of the South Shore Art Center, a non-profit regional center for the visual arts.

Tickets for the Art with a View garden sculpture tour are $35 at the South Shore Art Center, where attendees may also pick up maps, guide notes, and refreshments. Tickets to the Saturday evening dinner and auction are $150 per person, of which $75 represents a tax-deductible contribution to the Art Center.

Lanza exhibit

The James Library and Center for the Arts, 24 West St., presents an exhibit of oil paintings by Hingham artist, John Lanza, through June 1. The exhibit, entitled "Marsh Fever and Wanderlust" will comprise works from his summer teaching in Italy and recent landscapes from around the South Shore, especially views of marshes.

Lanza's grandparents emigrated from Italy and settled in Hingham. Lanza grew up there and sees these familiar surroundings through filters of nostalgia and discovery. He pursued art studies at Amherst College and Boston University and was awarded a master's degree in 1975. This year marks his 22nd year teaching at the Art Institute of Boston.

The exhibit may be viewed during library hours, Monday through Friday, from 2 to 5 p.m. and Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Call 659-7100 for further information.

Edaville Railroad reopens in June

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

If you thought it was gone forever, think again.

The legendary Carver landmark called Edaville Railroad which supposedly closed for good in 1992 is reopening once again. It will be open for a Memorial Day preview, and then it will officially open June 1.

And the people who work there say it's going to be better than it ever was.

"A lot of people were upset when the place closed," said Edaville Railroad general manager Brenda Johnson, adding the new lease on the railroad spans 20 years.

For those who are not familiar with Edaville Railroad, it features an authentic narrow gauge train pulled by steam and diesel locomotives. The train takes passengers on a 5.5 mile journey through the surrounding property which includes working cranberry plantations and different forms of wildlife.

The railroad is located right next to a series of cranberry bogs, and Johnson said that is part of the main attraction of the establishment.

Edaville Railroad also features a number of train-oriented exhibits as well as rides for children, eating establishments, a petting zoo, puppet shows, and more. Johnson said in the spirit of its re-opening, the staff at the railroad will be adding even more attractions to the place starting now, and continuing for the next five years or so.

She said such attractions include transforming the 13 cabooses on the property into 13 little shops including an ice cream stand, a candy store, and information center, a birthday party caboose, and even a "kid's clubhouse."

A crowd of riders waits for the Edaville to take them back in time aboard the historic train. The experience includes fun for the kids as well as a train ride along cranberry bogs.

Hall powers radio show

Rock legend's live performance to be broadcast on WATD's 'On The Mark'

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

WATD radio talk show host Ilana Marks wants to talk about power.

Not economic or political power, but rather, the power that comes from keeping a clean environment, and the power which comes through holistic and metaphysical healing.

On June 4, from 7:30-9p.m. on WATD, Marks will be hosting a concert by John Hall. Hall is a former member of the band Orleans, responsible for such chart toppers as "Still The One" and "Dance With Me."

Hall was also the organizer of the "No Nukes" concert held in the late '70s, which featured such artists as Carly Simon, Jackson Browne, and Hall himself. The No Nukes show was also the subject of a concert film which did exceptionally well in theaters.

Marks' broadcast will be held at the Scituate Country Club, and the public is welcome to attend. Marks said children around the area are being encouraged to submit artwork to the station, as children's artwork will be featured on the walls of the country club during the event.

It was fate which brought Hall to Marks' show. She said the subject matter she deals with on her show is something which Hall has always cared about, and despite his being on tour, Hall is making a special trip to Scituate just to do "On The Mark."

"I interviewed (Hall) last summer," Marks said. "He was doing a concert in Boston, and I've always been a big fan of his music and his message. After interviewing him, I found out that our mindsets were very similar. I liked his whole approach."

Hall could not be contacted for comment because he is currently on tour promoting two of his new albums. One is called "Love Doesn't Ask," and the other is called "John Hall Re-Covered."

Kelsey Grammer says his first production of "Macbeth" at Lincoln Center 20 years ago made just about every mistake in the book.

TV star of 'Frasier' accepts the meaty challenge of 'Macbeth'

By Alexander Stevens
CNC ARTS WRITER

Let's face it, it's funny: Frasier plays Macbeth. Is this what the theater has come to? Every TV star in Hollywood gets to pick their vanity project on Broadway? What's next, Niles as Richard III? Drew Carey as King Lear?

Those projects might be just one phone call away.

"It started because my wife made a phone call to her friend, who's a music promoter, and he called his friend, who's a Broadway producer," says Kelsey Grammer, on the phone from New York. "In about a day, we had decided we were going to do it. It's that simple."

Now Grammer rehearses with acclaimed Shakespeare director Terry Hands in New York for a show that will take a test drive May 18-28 at the Colonial Theatre in Boston, before parking on Broadway for a seven-week run.

Food & dining

Simple Sichuan noodles add spice to meal

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

We are besotted with the notion of Italian pasta yet we know little, if nothing, about Asian noodles which are, dare I say, more interesting and more sharply flavored than the rather bland spaghetti and tomato sauce served up in most American home kitchens. (Of course, authentic pasta dishes served in Italy are another matter altogether.) The Asian approach to noodles is, to a large extent, based on strong flavors such as ginger, soy sauce, chili oil, and garlic which marry nicely with rather bland but nicely textured Chinese noodles. In China, many of these dishes are considered snack foods and served in small portions in tiny, hole-in-the-wall restaurants. For us, they can easily be translated into a quick but appealing dinner.

I began with a recipe called Dan Dan Mian (Spicy Sichuan Noodles) from Ken Hom's "The Taste of China" which consists of minced pork with soy sauce, garlic, ginger, peanut butter, chile oil, etc. married with Chinese noodles. The recipe was wonderful but there were two problems. First, a few of the ingredients were not easily found in the supermarket and second, the flavors were a bit over the top for my palate – raw, garlicky, and spicy. Although anyone who has grown up with this food would violently disagree, I felt that the recipe needed to be taken down a notch or two for the American kitchen.

First, I decided to substitute ground pork for the minced variety and then, instead of frying the pork in peanut oil as Hom suggests, I decided to sauté it instead. The result was less greasy and, to my American palate, it tasted better. Next, I found the sauce a bit garlicky so I reduced the minced garlic to two tablespoons from three. The original recipe calls for cooking the garlic and ginger for only 30 seconds but a full two minutes of cooking produced a less raw, more subtle flavor.

The next question was whether sesame butter is better than peanut butter. I actually liked the peanut butter version better and since it is a staple in almost every home kitchen, it also made the recipe easier. The original sauce, made with two tablespoons chili oil, was too spicy so I reduced the amount to one tablespoon. I found that a touch of sweetness complemented the spicy chili oil so I tested honey and sugar and the latter was best. (It seems odd to add a tablespoon of sugar to a pasta sauce but this is not uncommon in Chinese cooking.) Hom also uses one teaspoon of salt in addition to the soy which seems a bit much but, to my surprise, I found salt adds another dimension of flavor, quite different than the saltiness present in soy sauce.

As for the noodles, I tested fresh noodles versus dried and preferred the latter. Chinese noodles come in 10-ounce packages and cook in just 3 minutes. The package directions suggest rinsing the noodles after cooking but I prefer to put them back into the cooking pot after partially draining them. They won't stick together and will remain hot.

SIMPLE SICHUAN NOODLES

I make no claims for authenticity here – this is an Americanized version of a classic Chinese dish. However, it is well suited to a quick midweek supper and all of the ingredients can be found in any decent supermarket. I prefer ground pork but chicken can be used in a pinch.

8 ounces ground pork or chicken
3 tablespoons dark soy sauce
Freshly ground pepper to taste
/cup peanut oil
2 tablespoon finely chopped garlic
2 tablespoon finely chopped ginger
/cup thinly sliced scallions from about 2 medium, half of the green stalks removed
2 tablespoons smooth peanut butter
1 tablespoon chili oil
1 tablespoon light brown or granulated sugar
2 teaspoons Kosher salt or 1 teaspoon table salt
8 ounces chicken stock
1 10-ounce package dry Chinese noodles

1. Put a large pot of water (4 quarts) over high heat to boil. Heat a large skillet over medium high heat. In a small bowl mix the ground pork or chicken, only one tablespoon of soy sauce, and a few grinds of pepper to combine well. Add 2 tablespoons of the peanut oil and add the pork. Cook the meat for 5 to 7 minutes or until it is well browned, breaking it apart with a spatula as it cooks. Remove the meat to a paper towel to drain and set aside.

2. Wipe out the skillet and set over medium heat. Add the remaining 2 tablespoons peanut oil to the skillet. Add the garlic, ginger and scallions and cook for 2 minutes. Add the peanut butter, the remaining two tablespoons soy sauce, chile oil, sugar, salt, and chicken stock to the skillet and stir or whisk to combine. Cook for about 5 minutes or until the sauce is thickened and shiny.

3. Meanwhile, when the water has boiled, cook the noodles for 3 minutes, breaking the noodles apart as they cook. Drain pasta in a colander for 30 seconds without shaking and then return them to the cooking pot while still wet (off heat). When the sauce is complete, place noodles in individual plates, ladle the sauce over the noodles and garnish with the pork and freshly ground pepper.

Serves 2 to 3 but can easily be doubled.

Rock legend's live performance to be broadcast on WATD

Marks said Hall has always written music about issues which concern him, and she said she is especially fond of an environmental anthem he wrote called "Power."

"People wanted to put a power plant right where he lived," Marks said, "and the words of the song 'Power' started coming to him."

Marks said she is excited Hall will be performing live on her show, because his music fits in with the subject matter she deals with on a weekly basis during her show. Marks said her show focuses on various ways to preserve and protect the environment, but she said the show also focuses on metaphysical and holistic healing, that is, healing through methods such as meditation or herbal remedies.

"The show talks about these kinds of alternative types of medicine," Marks said. "We deal with matters like holistic healing, but also things like dream interpretation and astrology. Overall, we're focusing on the earth and how to make it a better place. We tie environmental issues and issues concerning the mind, body, and spirit together."

Marks founded her talk radio show three years ago. When she first began, it was on local cable and it dealt with political matters. However, when political activity ceased for the given season, Marks brought on people from the realm of holistic healing, and she said the response she got was overwhelming.

She said in the past three years, the response she's received has been fantastic, and it will only get better, especially with guests like Hall.

"Before I started the show I talked with people who were under great amounts of stress, eating bad foods, sitting in traffic, and not getting a whole lot of enjoyment out of life. My show is all about how to enjoy life and achieve balance through alternate means. These days, we're so busy in our lives, and we need more than just regular exercise to deal with that. You can actually be happy."

Marks said Hall practices a lot of the methodology she preaches on her show, and she said the night he plays at the country club will illustrate that. She added Hall will be taking questions from the audience and will be playing selections from his recent albums as well as old Orleans favorites. He will also be signing compact discs.

"The country club is the perfect setting for this show," Marks said. "It's just so beautiful, as it is surrounded by the marsh and the river."

She added "(Hall) is really excited for this. We stay in contact regularly, so he's told me he feels great about it. He really believes in what I'm doing with my show."

Marks said music is very therapeutic, and Hall's concert should also serve as an example for that concept.

"Music is a great equalizer," Marks said. "It can reach people on a very deep level. But the energy behind the music is also a much deeper thing. People can learn from that experience. We all have unique purposes on this planet, and most of us don't even realize that."

For more information on the concert call Marks at (617) 877-7928 or log onto her website at llanamarks.com. Tickets for the upcoming broadcast cost $35.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17

Gear up for a hectic day. The moon travels in intense Scorpio and forms challenging alignments to Jupiter, Venus, Uranus and Saturn. In addition, social Venus aligns with Jupiter in the morning, Uranus in the evening and Saturn early tomorrow. Others may be irritable, argumentative. Keep a low profile. The good news is that you can be extremely productive. Influences are ideal for problem-solving, making repairs or renovations. Take time out for yourself this evening. Through prayer and meditation you can gain deep, penetrating insights.

THURSDAY, MAY 18

It's been a long time coming, but this full moon culminates at 3:34 a.m., 28-degrees of Scorpio. At this time the moon becomes inactive until 8:09 a.m., when it enters Sagittarius. In addition, a Venus/Saturn alignment impacts the morning. Resolve to start this day with a peaceful, lighthearted attitude. Let go of situations that are out of your control. Take time to pursue favorite activities that help you to relax, like sports, hobbies, exercise.

FRIDAY, MAY 19

Influences today and tomorrow may bring new challenges. Mercury and Mars conjoin at 8:26 a.m. and may spark debates, arguments, fast driving. In addition, the Sagittarius moon forms potentially stressful contacts to Mercury, Mars and Pluto. Slow down. Don't do or say anything you will later regret. A polarity of Mercury/Pluto places all major decisions, purchases, signings off limits. Finish old business rather than starting new activities today.

SATURDAY, MAY 20

Gear up for another action-packed day. Take it slow and easy. Move cautiously in business or romance. At 1:30 a.m. the Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of Jupiter/Uranus may generate restlessness, impulsiveness. Listen to the voice of reason. The sun enters Gemini at 1:50 p.m., remaining there until June 20, when the summer solstice arrives. A polarity of Mars and Pluto warns you to use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Influences begin to turn around at 8:01 p.m., when the moon enters pragmatic Capricorn.

SUNDAY, MAY 21

Today's influences bring a break in the planetary whirlwind occurring this month. A Capricorn moon all day forms no major alignment to planets and offers an opportunity to get back to practical matters. Focus on commitments you have made to others and follow through. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. The green light is on for new starts across the board.

MONDAY, MAY 22

Take advantage of today's relatively mild astrological patterns, and plan to get a lot accomplished. If you carefully organize your time, you can be most productive. It is best to initiate new activities before 3:24 p.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. Influences are above average for launching ventures, making important business decisions, career moves. Go for the gold.

TUESDAY, MAY 23

'Expect the unexpected' is the motto during the next few days. At 3:31 a.m. the Capricorn moon becomes inactive until 9:00 a.m., when it enters inventive Aquarius. The planetary ruler of Aquarius, Uranus, is slowing its rate of motion in order to begin retrograde travel. That means that things may not go as planned; projects can take unexpected turns. On the other hand, an applying alignment of Mercury/Uranus makes this day ideal for brainstorming. Keep an open mind. You can find new solutions to old problems.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. The Aquarius moon and Uranus in high profile may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Be willing to experiment with new ideas; be open to new experiences. All group-oriented projects are highlighted. You can let off steam by pursuing favorite sports or hobbies, spending extra time with friends.

Food & dining

Simple Sichuan noodles add spice to meal

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

We are besotted with the notion of Italian pasta yet we know little, if nothing, about Asian noodles which are, dare I say, more interesting and more sharply flavored than the rather bland spaghetti and tomato sauce served up in most American home kitchens. (Of course, authentic pasta dishes served in Italy are another matter altogether.) The Asian approach to noodles is, to a large extent, based on strong flavors such as ginger, soy sauce, chili oil, and garlic which marry nicely with rather bland but nicely textured Chinese noodles. In China, many of these dishes are considered snack foods and served in small portions in tiny, hole-in-the-wall restaurants. For us, they can easily be translated into a quick but appealing dinner.

I began with a recipe called Dan Dan Mian (Spicy Sichuan Noodles) from Ken Hom's "The Taste of China" which consists of minced pork with soy sauce, garlic, ginger, peanut butter, chile oil, etc. married with Chinese noodles. The recipe was wonderful but there were two problems. First, a few of the ingredients were not easily found in the supermarket and second, the flavors were a bit over the top for my palate – raw, garlicky, and spicy. Although anyone who has grown up with this food would violently disagree, I felt that the recipe needed to be taken down a notch or two for the American kitchen.

First, I decided to substitute ground pork for the minced variety and then, instead of frying the pork in peanut oil as Hom suggests, I decided to sauté it instead. The result was less greasy and, to my American palate, it tasted better. Next, I found the sauce a bit garlicky so I reduced the minced garlic to two tablespoons from three. The original recipe calls for cooking the garlic and ginger for only 30 seconds but a full two minutes of cooking produced a less raw, more subtle flavor.

The next question was whether sesame butter is better than peanut butter. I actually liked the peanut butter version better and since it is a staple in almost every home kitchen, it also made the recipe easier. The original sauce, made with two tablespoons chili oil, was too spicy so I reduced the amount to one tablespoon. I found that a touch of sweetness complemented the spicy chili oil so I tested honey and sugar and the latter was best. (It seems odd to add a tablespoon of sugar to a pasta sauce but this is not uncommon in Chinese cooking.) Hom also uses one teaspoon of salt in addition to the soy which seems a bit much but, to my surprise, I found salt adds another dimension of flavor, quite different than the saltiness present in soy sauce.

As for the noodles, I tested fresh noodles versus dried and preferred the latter. Chinese noodles come in 10-ounce packages and cook in just 3 minutes. The package directions suggest rinsing the noodles after cooking but I prefer to put them back into the cooking pot after partially draining them. They won't stick together and will remain hot.

SIMPLE SICHUAN NOODLES

I make no claims for authenticity here – this is an Americanized version of a classic Chinese dish. However, it is well suited to a quick midweek supper and all of the ingredients can be found in any decent supermarket. I prefer ground pork but chicken can be used in a pinch.

8 ounces ground pork or chicken
3 tablespoons dark soy sauce
Freshly ground pepper to taste
/cup peanut oil
2 tablespoon finely chopped garlic
2 tablespoon finely chopped ginger
/cup thinly sliced scallions from about 2 medium, half of the green stalks removed
2 tablespoons smooth peanut butter
1 tablespoon chili oil
1 tablespoon light brown or granulated sugar
2 teaspoons Kosher salt or 1 teaspoon table salt
8 ounces chicken stock
1 10-ounce package dry Chinese noodles

1. Put a large pot of water (4 quarts) over high heat to boil. Heat a large skillet over medium high heat. In a small bowl mix the ground pork or chicken, only one tablespoon of soy sauce, and a few grinds of pepper to combine well. Add 2 tablespoons of the peanut oil and add the pork. Cook the meat for 5 to 7 minutes or until it is well browned, breaking it apart with a spatula as it cooks. Remove the meat to a paper towel to drain and set aside.

2. Wipe out the skillet and set over medium heat. Add the remaining 2 tablespoons peanut oil to the skillet. Add the garlic, ginger and scallions and cook for 2 minutes. Add the peanut butter, the remaining two tablespoons soy sauce, chile oil, sugar, salt, and chicken stock to the skillet and stir or whisk to combine. Cook for about 5 minutes or until the sauce is thickened and shiny.

3. Meanwhile, when the water has boiled, cook the noodles for 3 minutes, breaking the noodles apart as they cook. Drain pasta in a colander for 30 seconds without shaking and then return them to the cooking pot while still wet (off heat). When the sauce is complete, place noodles in individual plates, ladle the sauce over the noodles and garnish with the pork and freshly ground pepper.

Serves 2 to 3 but can easily be doubled.

Rock legend's live performance to be broadcast on WATD

Marks said Hall has always written music about issues which concern him, and she said she is especially fond of an environmental anthem he wrote called "Power."

"People wanted to put a power plant right where he lived," Marks said, "and the words of the song 'Power' started coming to him."

Marks said she is excited Hall will be performing live on her show, because his music fits in with the subject matter she deals with on a weekly basis during her show. Marks said her show focuses on various ways to preserve and protect the environment, but she said the show also focuses on metaphysical and holistic healing, that is, healing through methods such as meditation or herbal remedies.

"The show talks about these kinds of alternative types of medicine," Marks said. "We deal with matters like holistic healing, but also things like dream interpretation and astrology. Overall, we're focusing on the earth and how to make it a better place. We tie environmental issues and issues concerning the mind, body, and spirit together."

Marks founded her talk radio show three years ago. When she first began, it was on local cable and it dealt with political matters. However, when political activity ceased for the given season, Marks brought on people from the realm of holistic healing, and she said the response she got was overwhelming.

She said in the past three years, the response she's received has been fantastic, and it will only get better, especially with guests like Hall.

"Before I started the show I talked with people who were under great amounts of stress, eating bad foods, sitting in traffic, and not getting a whole lot of enjoyment out of life. My show is all about how to enjoy life and achieve balance through alternate means. These days, we're so busy in our lives, and we need more than just regular exercise to deal with that. You can actually be happy."

Marks said Hall practices a lot of the methodology she preaches on her show, and she said the night he plays at the country club will illustrate that. She added Hall will be taking questions from the audience and will be playing selections from his recent albums as well as old Orleans favorites. He will also be signing compact discs.

"The country club is the perfect setting for this show," Marks said. "It's just so beautiful, as it is surrounded by the marsh and the river."

She added "(Hall) is really excited for this. We stay in contact regularly, so he's told me he feels great about it. He really believes in what I'm doing with my show."

Marks said music is very therapeutic, and Hall's concert should also serve as an example for that concept.

"Music is a great equalizer," Marks said. "It can reach people on a very deep level. But the energy behind the music is also a much deeper thing. People can learn from that experience. We all have unique purposes on this planet, and most of us don't even realize that."

For more information on the concert call Marks at (617) 877-7928 or log onto her website at llanamarks.com. Tickets for the upcoming broadcast cost $35.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17

Gear up for a hectic day. The moon travels in intense Scorpio and forms challenging alignments to Jupiter, Venus, Uranus and Saturn. In addition, social Venus aligns with Jupiter in the morning, Uranus in the evening and Saturn early tomorrow. Others may be irritable, argumentative. Keep a low profile. The good news is that you can be extremely productive. Influences are ideal for problem-solving, making repairs or renovations. Take time out for yourself this evening. Through prayer and meditation you can gain deep, penetrating insights.

THURSDAY, MAY 18

It's been a long time coming, but this full moon culminates at 3:34 a.m., 28-degrees of Scorpio. At this time the moon becomes inactive until 8:09 a.m., when it enters Sagittarius. In addition, a Venus/Saturn alignment impacts the morning. Resolve to start this day with a peaceful, lighthearted attitude. Let go of situations that are out of your control. Take time to pursue favorite activities that help you to relax, like sports, hobbies, exercise.

FRIDAY, MAY 19

Influences today and tomorrow may bring new challenges. Mercury and Mars conjoin at 8:26 a.m. and may spark debates, arguments, fast driving. In addition, the Sagittarius moon forms potentially stressful contacts to Mercury, Mars and Pluto. Slow down. Don't do or say anything you will later regret. A polarity of Mercury/Pluto places all major decisions, purchases, signings off limits. Finish old business rather than starting new activities today.

SATURDAY, MAY 20

Gear up for another action-packed day. Take it slow and easy. Move cautiously in business or romance. At 1:30 a.m. the Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of Jupiter/Uranus may generate restlessness, impulsiveness. Listen to the voice of reason. The sun enters Gemini at 1:50 p.m., remaining there until June 20, when the summer solstice arrives. A polarity of Mars and Pluto warns you to use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Influences begin to turn around at 8:01 p.m., when the moon enters pragmatic Capricorn.

SUNDAY, MAY 21

Today's influences bring a break in the planetary whirlwind occurring this month. A Capricorn moon all day forms no major alignment to planets and offers an opportunity to get back to practical matters. Focus on commitments you have made to others and follow through. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. The green light is on for new starts across the board.

MONDAY, MAY 22

Take advantage of today's relatively mild astrological patterns, and plan to get a lot accomplished. If you carefully organize your time, you can be most productive. It is best to initiate new activities before 3:24 p.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with expansive Jupiter. Influences are above average for launching ventures, making important business decisions, career moves. Go for the gold.

TUESDAY, MAY 23

'Expect the unexpected' is the motto during the next few days. At 3:31 a.m. the Capricorn moon becomes inactive until 9:00 a.m., when it enters inventive Aquarius. The planetary ruler of Aquarius, Uranus, is slowing its rate of motion in order to begin retrograde travel. That means that things may not go as planned; projects can take unexpected turns. On the other hand, an applying alignment of Mercury/Uranus makes this day ideal for brainstorming. Keep an open mind. You can find new solutions to old problems.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24

Yesterday's advice pertains to today as well. The Aquarius moon and Uranus in high profile may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Be willing to experiment with new ideas; be open to new experiences. All group-oriented projects are highlighted. You can let off steam by pursuing favorite sports or hobbies, spending extra time with friends.

She said down the road, the staff will be looking into offering boat rides through the nearby reservoir, and offering a barbecue establishment as well.

Johnson added some new antique train-oriented artifacts were brought in to decorate the park to add to all the train memorabilia which exists there already.

Three main people were responsible for Edaville Railroad's re-opening and they were Doug Beaton, who is the park's CEO, John Delli Priscolli, a developer from Marlboro, and John Flagg, who is the onsite president of the railroad. Incidentally, Beaton works in the area as a cranberry grower, so he is familiar with the terrain.

Johnson said the three men worked on re-opening the place for a long time before they signed the new 20-year lease last March.

"The three of them just got together and decided they wanted to make this a family attraction again," Johnson said, noting between all three men, an approximate $3 million was put into the re-establishment of attractions at the park.

"Like everyone else, I always enjoyed going to Edaville Railroad," Beaton said. "It was very sad when it closed. I'm a cranberry grower, so I always thought this was a neat thing to experience."

Beaton said about six years ago, he decided he wanted to play a part in re-opening the railroad. Two years ago, he met Flagg and Priscolli, and all three agreed that re-opening Edaville Railroad was both necessary as an attraction, but also historically important.

Edaville Railroad was not always a place for amusement, but rather, it was a place where a great deal of hard work was done.

The railroad got its start in the 1940s when cranberry grower Ellis D. Atwood needed a better way to harvest his crop located on the property.

Atwood was known as a train enthusiast, and he saw narrow gauge trains as the answer to his harvesting dilemma. With such a train, he knew he would be able to harvest cranberries from remote locations on his 1,800 acre farm. Narrow gauge railways were developed in Maine in the 1870s, and they served as a cost effective way to haul passengers. But by the 1940s, cars dominated the world of travel, and many of the narrow gauge railways had disappeared.

But Atwood found one narrow gauge track system which still existed and he bought it. He purchased the track, the engines, and all the other parts of the system. He then moved the track system to his plantation in Carver and by 1946, he had completed building a 5.5 mile track around the property.

He called it the Edaville Railroad based on his own initials, E.D.A..

His system proved successful for hauling more cranberries. He would haul his cranberries with his newly developed train system, and he would bring them to a processing location on his property.

Eventually, the people who lived in the area around Atwood started asking for rides on the train, and that was the beginning of a tradition.

Atwood was a very giving man. He gave everyone rides on the train, and even decorated the place for Christmas, a tradition which still exists there today. He eventually added a museum on the location as well as eating facilities, and the place soon became a New England landmark.

Atwood died in 1955, and the place was taken over by F. Nelson Blount, another railroad enthusiast. Blount added exhibits to the park, and maintained its reputation.

Blount was killed in a plane crash in 1967, but his family continued to run the place under the direction of a man named Fred Richardson. In 1970, the place was sold to a man named George Bartholomew, who had worked at the railroad when he was a small boy.

Bartholomew ran the park until 1991 when he lost the lease to the property from the Atwood Estate.

But the park is no longer lost.

"I think part of the attraction of the place is just the overall mystique," Beaton said, "as well as the marriage between the cranberry industry and the environment. It's always changing every season. The train ride is just a nice, peaceful, quiet time. It gives you time to reflect.

Beaton said he enjoys his new partnership. He said "All three of us really enjoy working with each other. When we're done, this place will be absolutely amazing."

"It's just a safe, fun place where people can come year after year," Johnson concluded. "Every time people come here, you can always hear them saying 'I remember this, or I remember that.'"

Tickets to Edaville are $12.50 for adults, $7.50 for children ages 3-12, and $10.50 for senior citizens. As of June 1, the park will be open daily from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m.. Memorial Day activities will be held May 27-29. For more information on the railroad call (508) 866-8190 or log onto the website at www.edaville-railroad.com.

Shakespeare teaches Grammer lessons

other circumstances] to simply say, 'You know what, let's do Macbeth,' and then have it get done, unless I was on a TV show."

This development style may not bode well for the future of Broadway, but it also might not be as surprising as it first appears — after all, Grammer is a classically trained actor. Well, partially.

"I was kicked out," says Grammer, explaining why he never made it past his second year in the prestigious acting program at the Julliard School. "Pretty much, I wasn't showing up for classes," he adds with a laugh. "I just didn't get along with the acting teacher. Those things happen. It wasn't a stormy separation. [They said,] 'Kelse, it isn't working out so great, so be on your way.' And I was happy to do so."

But even though Grammer never completed his classical training, he's had some impressive on-the-job training with this Shakespearean stuff. Six years ago, he played "Richard II" in Los Angeles. And 20 years ago, at Lincoln Center, in New York, he actually nabbed the title role in "Macbeth," when the star of the show bowed out, allowing an unknown understudy named Kelsey Grammer to take the role for the remainder of the run.

But Grammer admits that production probably served more as a primer on how not to produce "Macbeth."

"It's funny, Terry Hands points out certain things that are characteristically really bad choices to do in the play," says Grammer, "and pretty much everything he says is a bad idea, we did in that other production."

Hands, who has directed more than 50 productions for the Royal Shakespeare Company, has a specific concept for this production of "Macbeth" — a concept Grammer describes as a show that runs with the momentum of "a freight train." This story of Macbeth — a man who is trapped in a web of murder and deceit by his ambition (and wife) — will be played at breakneck speed, a concept, Grammer says, that's in line with his own.

Grammer's first attempt at Macbeth may have been a creative disappointment, but it left him hungry for another chance at the role, with the hope that the next time he could "do it right."

"I was too young — I was 25 years old at the time," he says. "I was just a little too light for the role. Now I have more life experience behind me, I have more weight — not only physically, but emotionally — to bring to the role."

And Grammer, 45, knows the role demands heft.

"Besides the fact that it's probably one of the most challenging roles ever written, it's also got some extraordinary language. It's an interesting character. Actors are almost always drawn to characters that are different from role to role, and certainly Macbeth is probably not real close to Frasier," he adds with a laugh, "although Frasier would probably like to be a little more Macbethian."

Ah, yes, Frasier, the character that first popped up on "Cheers" as Diane's love interest, and ended up staying on a bar stool long after Shelley Long had disappeared. Frasier, as played by Grammer, quickly found his way into America's heart, and now his own show.

It would be easy to underestimate just how fine a piece of acting Grammer conjures up every week on the highly rated, critically acclaimed "Frasier" (three Emmys for Grammer). Dr. Frasier Crane constantly edges toward arrogant, but Grammer — with the help of some of the best comic writing on TV — always makes him lovable, partly because we never sense his arrogance runs too deep, and it's constantly overwhelmed by his charming insecurities.

And perhaps the arched theatricality in Dr. Frasier Crane is well-suited to Shakespeare. It's easy to imagine Grammer's sonorous voice on a Shakespearean stage.

And there's another reason why Frasier playing Macbeth may not be such a surprising stretch. While there's something lightweight about sitcom actors like Jerry Seinfeld, Ray Romano, and Paul Reiser, that's never been the case with Grammer. There's a dark side to this actor that suits itself well to a Shakespearean tragedy.

Specifically, Grammer has been up-front about his addictions — he's a veteran of rehab — and he's sure those life experiences will inform his portrayal of Macbeth.

"It's all grist for the mill," he says. "It all comes along for the ride. When a man stands there — not just a 25-year-old — it's all there. We wear every day of our lives on our bodies, and I'm actually proud of what I get to wear now. I love being this man now."

And, suddenly, "Frasier plays Macbeth" isn't so funny at all.

"Macbeth" plays May 18-28, at the Colonial Theatre, in Boston. Tickets are $25-68.50. Call (617) 426-9366.

Silence does not always make a case for fraud

By Anthony Summers

Anthony Summers

The general rule of law is that a person assumes responsibility for the consequences of his/her fully informed decisions.

Although it may be less painful to forget rather than remember and regret, self-delusion is never an adequate substitute for cold hard facts.

In the Superior Court Case of Feltmate v. Dumas, the plaintiff sought the unusual remedy of rescinding a completed home purchase.

Background

On June 24, 1998, the Feltmates (buyers, plaintiffs) offered to buy Pauline Dumas' (seller, defendant) home in Acushnet.

Prior to executing the agreement, the Feltmates had visited the property several times and enjoyed numerous discussions with both the seller and the broker.

During those visits, the seller had disclosed that there was occasional ponding in the front yard and water in the basement. The seller pointed to a basement sump pump and a front yard drainage system which pumped front yard ponding water into the street.

The seller pointed to the sump pump in the cellar and advised the buyer that the water marks on the cellar floor and walls were the result of in-flow of rain water. On June 24, 1996, the seller delivered a "Disclosure Statement" which stated that "Continuous days of heavy rainfall will cause above ground water in the middle of the yard. Pump in shed drains water quickly if necessary."

On Aug. 9, 1996, the property was sold to the buyers. Much to their dismay, the Feltmates experienced substantial ponding from November 1996 through the spring of 1997, and the same for 1997 and 1998. Dissatisfied with the ever-present water problem, the Feltmates filed suit seeking to rescind the sale plus money damage for sellers' misrepresentation as to the condition of the property.

Discussion

Massachusetts Law requires a plaintiff to prove a false representation by the defendant in order to prevail on a claim for rescinding of a contract. "Mere silence with respect to a defect later discovered, does not constitute a misrepresentation by the Defendant."

"Therefore in order to prevail upon a fraud or misrepresentation claim, the buyers must offer compelling evidence that the seller made a false statement ... concerning the property or uttered a half truth which may then amount to a falsehood."

Decision

In this case, the seller did advise the buyers of various water problems. "Surely the Buyers cannot credibly maintain that they remained oblivious to the implications of the drain, pipes, pump, hoses, etc, all sitting in plain view." Decision for the seller — the buyers' case fails.

Legal advice

When selling your home, if you remain silent as to a certain condition, you will probably not later be vulnerable to a complaint for fraud or misrepresentation. Remember, that once you open a discussion of a particular condition, make the disclosure complete, and most important, memorialize everything in writing, otherwise, what you failed to document may return to haunt you.

The evolution of a perennial garden

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

The weather in New England is always an adventure. In less than a two-week span, Mother Nature offered a whirlwind tour of three seasons. From snowflakes to stifling heat with a few glimpses of springtime in between, plants and gardeners alike were taken on a roller coaster ride of highs and lows, often in the same afternoon. Plants which had been sulking during the extended period of damp, dreary weather, sprang to life when warmed by the rays of a summertime sun. Even those plants nipped by a series of frosty mornings dramatically recovered during our brief heat wave. Hardy plants and those who nurture them learn to adapt to these weather events and demonstrate a resilience which our New England weather demands.

Each season, unsuspecting homeowners venture to their local nurseries only to find themselves suddenly bitten by the gardening bug. For some, the disease progresses at a moderate pace, a few container gardens, a perennial border and perhaps a small plot for vegetables. But for others, especially those prone to obsessive-compulsive behavior, the affliction may reach epidemic proportions.

When we purchased our current home nearly 25 years ago, I was truly a fledgling gardener. An acre and a half of full sun and a charming brook were primary factors in selecting the property as these conditions guaranteed the ability to cultivate vegetables and to attract wildlife, both budding interests which we hoped to pursue in our spare time. The veggie garden was prepared and ready to plant before we had even passed papers on our new dwelling, but my Mom insisted that a house was not a home without a perennial garden. In early June, she and my grandmother arrived with several hundred perennials and we planted instant perennial borders on either side of the entrance to our garage.

Many perennials manage to survive, and even thrive, despite minimal attention.

My design concept was simple; in essence, my method was equivalent to taking the plants and throwing them into the air and then planting them where they landed. Since the relatively narrow plots could be viewed from either side, a systematic arrangement by height seemed unnecessary and pretty blooms, regardless of their color combinations, were my primary objective. With only the weekends to tend to these two borders and the vegetable garden, my elementary approach to garden design appeared adequate. Many perennials manage to survive, and even thrive, despite minimal attention. The occasional watering, weeding and deadheading I practiced on weekends produced a rather lovely collection of flowers, but I gradually began to realize that the plants and the gardens lacked a meaningful relationship to one another.

When I gave up the tedious commute to Boston more than 20 years ago to raise my children, my weekend hobby became a full time obsession. I had to acquire one of every perennial on the market. Once I had exhausted the supply to be found at local nurseries, I started making a regular pilgrimage to the more extensive garden centers west and north of Boston. I ordered from dozens of catalogs, frequented garden club plant sales, read magazines and devoured books on perennials, and in a few short years, I honestly believe I had tried nearly every perennial available at that time, admittedly with varying success.

The difficulty with obsessive-compulsive type personalities, or shall we say those with passionate hobbies, is that they tend to be insatiable. The quest for new and different plants or cultivars becomes all-consuming. My particular pursuit for unique plants demanded that the quantity and size of my gardens increase each year, and I often found myself (and I still do) wandering aimlessly about the yard searching for just enough space to put my several dozen new acquisitions in existing beds, only to abandon my efforts in favor of gathering a rather impressive collection of potted specimens along my walkways, driveway and beneath adjacent trees. This often leads visitors to believe that I am running a nursery. Each November, panic sets in when temperatures drop. The threat of frozen ground forces me to heel in my treasures wherever I can, but many face the cold winter months above ground and a large percentage succumb to the elements.

Through the years, I may not have learned to curb my "plant habit" but my knowledge of perennials and how to combine them has gradually evolved to the point where many of the gardens are no longer merely a collection of plants and actually present an attractive, appealing composition, a garden design. As with any art form, study, practice and more study are the essential building blocks of becoming a skillful garden designer. My advice to those recently bitten by the gardening bug is to begin with a small, manageable plot which can be easily maintained. When selecting trees, shrubs and perennials, look for plants which offer multiple seasons of interest, especially those which have glorious foliage. If a plant has attractive blooms, consider that a bonus as the blossoms tend to be fleeting but the foliage will be a factor for the entire growing season.

The plant sale parade continues. Come to Hanover Center on May 20 for the Hanover Garden Club plant sale at the Congregational Church and the Walnut Hill Garden Club

Planning a wedding in Las Vegas

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I'd like to get married in Las Vegas, and I'm looking for information and packages, but my local travel agent is clueless. Can you help?

A. Las Vegas is a popular wedding destination, with over 100,000 marriages performed each year, perhaps because there are no blood tests and no waiting period required, and the Marriage License Bureau is open from 8 a.m. until midnight Sunday through Thursday, and 24 hours a day on Friday and Saturday.

To plan your wedding, check out the Las Vegas Tourist Bureau Web site at www.lvtb.com, or call (800) 522-9555.

Q. You recently wrote about stowing wheelchairs onboard commercial airlines. The way I read the article, it seemed you were implying that only Northwest Airlines allows passengers to stow wheelchairs in the cabin. All domestic carriers, not just Northwest, are required to allow disabled passengers to do so.

We've traveled extensively with our daughter, who uses a wheelchair, and have often had to "remind" the crew that it is OK to stow the chair in the cabin. If they only realized how critical wheelchairs are to the everyday needs of a disabled traveler, how expensive they are and how it is almost impossible to replace a broken part when you're away from home - especially when the traveler has lost their mobility - then I'm sure they'd be more cooperative.

Often, the flight attendants put their own luggage in the closets (where wheelchairs would otherwise be stowed) and there is no room.

A. I didn't mean to imply that only Northwest must follow these rules. I hope that flight attendants will read this and be more sensitive to the needs of those with less mobility than they have.

Q. We are planning a trip to San Francisco and were hoping to make it out to Napa. Is there anyway to do it without renting a car? There is a wine train tour that we were hoping to hop on once we get to Napa, but it's getting there and back that is the problem.

A. The problem with do-it-yourself wine country tours is that unless you have a designated driver, you're forced to combine drinking and driving - never a good idea.

A much better way is to join a group tour. Gray Line San Francisco (www.grayline.com, or (415) 558-7300, or (800) 826-0202) operates a tour to Napa that includes the Wine Train and lasts 9 1/2 hours. There's a wine tasting on board and a stop at one winery on the way back.

The tour operates daily and costs $95 for adults or $55 for children 11 or younger. For more information on the Wine Train, visit www.winetrain.com, or call (707) 253-2111, or (800) 427-4124.

Q. I'd like to visit historic homes, castles and other sites in the United Kingdom this summer. Is there an all-in-one admission ticket that will let us see an unlimited number of places for one fee? And, where can I get a directory of all the sites?

A. The Great British Heritage Pass provides unlimited entry to more than 600 castles, stately homes and gardens in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

A gazetteer that comes with the pass lists all the places you can visit, such as Hampton Court Palace in southwest London, Shakespeare's birthplace in Stratford-upon-Avon, Edinburgh Castle, poet William Wordsworth's Lake District home and Roman forts on Hadrian's Wall in northern England.

The pass costs $54 for seven days; $75 for 15 days; or $102 for one month, and can be purchased from travel agents, BritRail (888/BRITRAIL, www.raileurope.com), or in person at the British Tourist Authority (551 Fifth Ave., Seventh floor, New York City).

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy CNC Film Critic

Hamlet (B+)

To be or not to be, one of the classic existential questions, is as pertinent to our time as to Shakespeare's and to the imagined time, in Denmark, where the action of the play first took place. It has been staged a hundred different ways, maybe more, probably more, none more interestingly in recent years, onscreen at least, than this Manhattan-based, zippily paced, at times drastically cut interpretation, starring Ethan Hawke, as "happening" a young performer as there is to be found, as the melancholy young heir to the Denmark Corporation fortune.

This Hamlet is "into" video and even brings us a snippet of the players' interpretation of what has happened in "real" life as a video production, and he comes to us first in a Blockbuster video store, mouthing his "to be or not to be" in the "action" aisles; though most of his monologues are interior, this one is spoken aloud.

Claudius (Kyle MacLachlan) is now the head of the Denmark Corporation, married to Gertrude (Diane Venora), whose husband, now a ghost (Sam Shepard), has been perhaps despatched by foul deeds. At least Hamlet fears so and the ghost, his father, says so, unequivocally, if in some phrases obliquely. We meet the ghost first on a video security screen and later find him evanescing into a Pepsi machine: This is resolutely modern in every aspect, and the staging, bold and original, is uncompromising. Hawke's one-note Hamlet wanders the streets and the urban landscape in a wool cap - you expect him at any moment to burst into rap - with a look of pasty despondency on his face. Hawke's is in some way the weakest performance of the major characterizations, not because he is bad (though he does not put forth a wide range of expressions) but because so many of the others are so fine.

Notably fine is Bill Murray's Polonius as a defeated man or at least one who has seen most of his days as better days and is now intent on holding fast to what little grace he can manage - we saw a sprightlier, but still poignant incarnation of this approach in his role in "Cradle Will Rock" this winter. Also, notably, Live Schreiber's Laertes, whose part is small but memorably taut. Also, Venora's Gertrude and MacLachlan's Claudius, social climber and industrial giant respectively, aware of their sin but determined to transcend it and get on with business, and with life. A final performance deserving special praise is that of Julia Stiles as Ophelia, whose great mad scene is staged at the Guggenheim Museum, used as well as ever it has been used in a movie. The cityscape of great skyscrapers and spare, shiny, lifeless modern interiors is just right for the staging of much of the action, and the use of technology, of tape machines, phones, videocams, answering machines, fits perfectly into the contemporary mis-en-scene. Not better than amore traditional approach, just more of our era, this is one "Hamlet" that should entice into the Bard's work a new audience.

Written (derived from Shakespeare) and directed by Michael Almereyda. Rated R

A tribute to town's unsung heroes

Herb Jason, 86, realizes a lifelong dream when the memorial to lightkeepers Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine was unveiled on Government Island on Sunday.

By Bill Hutton
CORRESPONDENT

For the last of their 20 years, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson toiled in obscurity on the first Minot Ledge lighthouse, shining their light on others. On Sunday, however, the spotlight was placed directly on them. In an emotional ceremony held on Government Island, the two men who, "kept a good light" were recognized for their bravery in the face of adversity by the officials and townspeople of Cohasset, most notably Herb Jason, who unveiled a granite monument in their honor.

"These men demonstrated a devotion to duty that any man worth his salt would respect...eventually making the ultimate sacrifice, for their country."
— Captain Blaine Horrocks, US Coast Guard

Jason, 86, a local lobsterman and lifelong resident of Cohasset, spearheaded a four-year lobbying and fund-raising effort, aimed at making his longtime dream of building a monument in honor of the two light keepers become a reality. Assisting Jason in the unveiling of the monument were his brother Kenneth R. Jason and his grandson John Small. The bell was then tolled three times — once each for Joseph Antoine, Joseph Wilson and all other light keepers who perished in the line of duty.

Wigmore Pierson, who served as Master of Ceremonies for the event, in addition to being one the principal organizers, gave a brief history of Minot's Ledge Light. He spoke of the decision, "to erect a light house designed by Captain William Swift on the Minot Ledges" in 1847 which would minimize the loss of lives at sea, which numbered in the thousands, and the eventual hiring of

Hedlund tries to stop train

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

In the shifting sands of the Greenbush saga — one fact has remained a constant: state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund is against the train.

To that end, the Weymouth Republican was able to convince the rest of the senators in his party — all six of them — to support an amendment to the state budget that would stop Greenbush in its tracks.

"At least I will have had the opportunity to go on record in opposition to this boondoggle."
— State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund

The senator — who faces a reelection battle in November — will ask for a roll call vote on the amendment that was set to take place last night after the Journal went to press or sometime today.

Specifically the amendment asks "to prohibit the MBTA from running or operating diesel rail service via the so-called Greenbush railroad right-of-way including but not limited to the communities of Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate."

Hedlund's amendment follows on the heels of a deal inked between Hingham selectmen and the MBTA that included an 800-foot-long tunnel under Hingham Square and $1.35 million in mitigation money for historic preservation. The agreement removed what many

West Corner bridge needs repairs

By Mary Ford

The West Corner bridge is falling down.

That was the clear message at the meeting of the Straits Pond Watershed Association meeting this week.

The grassroots group made up of citizens and town officials mainly from Cohasset and Hull is dedicated to improving the environment of the pond and plans to enlist the help of state and federal agencies in their cleanup effort.

A recent inspection of the bridge that is jointly owned by Hingham, Hull and Cohasset and is located where the pond meets the Weir River revealed that rocks had worked their way loose from the support structure opening a hole in the side wall. There's another large hole that is two feet in diameter on the left inside wall under the bridge.

"If something happens to the bridge all three towns will be seriously impacted.
— Augie Stratou, Straits Pond Watershed Association

Hull residents Augie Stratoti and Bill McNamara inspected the bridge and submitted a report with photographs to the watershed association Monday night.

They recommend a formal inspection by the state and that a plan for repairs be drawn up as soon as possible.

Selectmen split on lobster pound vote

By Dan Gravel
STAFF WRITER

The plan to relocate the Cohasset Lobster Pound to the Hagerty property remains on life-support but is not yet dead in the water.

In a surprising vote Tuesday night selectmen deadlocked on whether the business should be allowed to operate on town-owned land, with Roseanne McMorris not in attendance. The issue will again be on the agenda at the next meeting, when another vote will be taken.

"The Hagerty property has a long history of not having commercial influence down there," said Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti. The Hagerty committee voted against the proposal last week. "We are not against their particular company, but are concerned with the number of parking spaces we would lose in the whole plan."

Business partners Tommy Alioto and Chris "Dino" DiNatale, who have run the lobster pound at 82 Border Street for the past five years, are being forced to move out of their current location because of the sale of the property to Peter Roy.

"We feel it would be a benefit to the town, the lobstermen and of course us, to stay located near the harbor," said DiNatale, who added that it would generate income for the town.

CNC will bid for Ledger, others

By Jeanne M. Rideout and Kurt Blumenau

Community Newspaper Co. officials say they plan to be among the bidders for the Patriot Ledger of Quincy, the Enterprise of Brockton and the Memorial Press Group chain, all placed on the market yesterday.

Kirk Davis, CNC president and chief executive officer, said the newspapers would fit well with the company's portfolio of South Shore papers. CNC, based in Needham, owns more than 100 daily and weekly newspapers in eastern Massachusetts, including the MetroWest Daily News and the Mariner weeklies south of Boston.

"These newspapers would be a nice complement to ours and create a nice combination of regional and community coverage on the South Shore."
— Kirk Davis, CNC president and CEO

"These newspapers would be a nice complement to ours and create a nice combination of regional and community coverage on the South Shore," Davis said. "We are interested in the purchase and look forward to being involved in the process."

James F. Plugh, publisher of the Ledger, Enterprise and MPG, announced his unexpected plans to sell in an memo to employees made public yesterday. Plugh said he was recently diagnosed with what his doctor called "a mini-stroke."

"I certainly hope he fares well," Davis said.

Plugh and New York financier Frank Richardson led a group of investors who bought the Enterprise in 1997 and the Ledger and MPG in 1998, all from longtime family owners. Reports at the time set the Ledger's price tag at $70 million and

Planning a wedding in Las Vegas

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I'd like to get married in Las Vegas, and I'm looking for information and packages, but my local travel agent is clueless. Can you help?

A. Las Vegas is a popular wedding destination, with over 100,000 marriages performed each year, perhaps because there are no blood tests and no waiting period required, and the Marriage License Bureau is open from 8 a.m. until midnight Sunday through Thursday, and 24 hours a day on Friday and Saturday.

To plan your wedding, check out the Las Vegas Tourist Bureau Web site at www.lvtb.com, or call (800) 522-9555.

Q. You recently wrote about stowing wheelchairs onboard commercial airlines. The way I read the article, it seemed you were implying that only Northwest Airlines allows passengers to stow wheelchairs in the cabin. All domestic carriers, not just Northwest, are required to allow disabled passengers to do so.

We've traveled extensively with our daughter, who uses a wheelchair, and have often had to "remind" the crew that it is OK to stow the chair in the cabin. If they only realized how critical wheelchairs are to the everyday needs of a disabled traveler, how expensive they are and how it is almost impossible to replace a broken part when you're away from home - especially when the traveler has lost their mobility - then I'm sure they'd be more cooperative.

Often, the flight attendants put their own luggage in the closets (where wheelchairs would otherwise be stowed) and there is no room.

A. I didn't mean to imply that only Northwest must follow these rules. I hope that flight attendants will read this and be more sensitive to the needs of those with less mobility than they have.

Q. We are planning a trip to San Francisco and were hoping to make it out to Napa. Is there anyway to do it without renting a car? There is a wine train tour that we were hoping to hop on once we get to Napa, but it's getting there and back that is the problem.

A. The problem with do-it-yourself wine country tours is that unless you have a designated driver, you're forced to combine drinking and driving - never a good idea.

A much better way is to join a group tour. Gray Line San Francisco (www.grayline.com, or (415) 558-7300, or (800) 826-0202) operates a tour to Napa that includes the Wine Train and lasts 9 1/2 hours. There's a wine tasting on board and a stop at one winery on the way back.

The tour operates daily and costs $95 for adults or $55 for children 11 or younger. For more information on the Wine Train, visit www.winetrain.com, or call (707) 253-2111, or (800) 427-4124.

Q. I'd like to visit historic homes, castles and other sites in the United Kingdom this summer. Is there an all-in-one admission ticket that will let us see an unlimited number of places for one fee? And, where can I get a directory of all the sites?

A. The Great British Heritage Pass provides unlimited entry to more than 600 castles, stately homes and gardens in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

A gazetteer that comes with the pass lists all the places you can visit, such as Hampton Court Palace in southwest London, Shakespeare's birthplace in Stratford-upon-Avon, Edinburgh Castle, poet William Wordsworth's Lake District home and Roman forts on Hadrian's Wall in northern England.

The pass costs $54 for seven days; $75 for 15 days; or $102 for one month, and can be purchased from travel agents, BritRail (888/BRITRAIL, www.raileurope.com), or in person at the British Tourist Authority (551 Fifth Ave., Seventh floor, New York City).

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy CNC Film Critic

Hamlet (B+)

To be or not to be, one of the classic existential questions, is as pertinent to our time as to Shakespeare's and to the imagined time, in Denmark, where the action of the play first took place. It has been staged a hundred different ways, maybe more, probably more, none more interestingly in recent years, onscreen at least, than this Manhattan-based, zippily paced, at times drastically cut interpretation, starring Ethan Hawke, as "happening" a young performer as there is to be found, as the melancholy young heir to the Denmark Corporation fortune.

This Hamlet is "into" video and even brings us a snippet of the players' interpretation of what has happened in "real" life as a video production, and he comes to us first in a Blockbuster video store, mouthing his "to be or not to be" in the "action" aisles; though most of his monologues are interior, this one is spoken aloud.

Claudius (Kyle MacLachlan) is now the head of the Denmark Corporation, married to Gertrude (Diane Venora), whose husband, now a ghost (Sam Shepard), has been perhaps despatched by foul deeds. At least Hamlet fears so and the ghost, his father, says so, unequivocally, if in some phrases obliquely. We meet the ghost first on a video security screen and later find him evanescing into a Pepsi machine: This is resolutely modern in every aspect, and the staging, bold and original, is uncompromising. Hawke's one-note Hamlet wanders the streets and the urban landscape in a wool cap - you expect him at any moment to burst into rap - with a look of pasty despondency on his face. Hawke's is in some way the weakest performance of the major characterizations, not because he is bad (though he does not put forth a wide range of expressions) but because so many of the others are so fine.

Notably fine is Bill Murray's Polonius as a defeated man or at least one who has seen most of his days as better days and is now intent on holding fast to what little grace he can manage - we saw a sprightlier, but still poignant incarnation of this approach in his role in 'Cradle Will Rock" this winter. Also, notably, Live Schreiber's Laertes, whose part is small but memorably taut. Also, Venora's Gertrude and MacLachlan's Claudius, social climber and industrial giant respectively, aware of their sin but determined to transcend it and get on with business, and with life. A final performance deserving special praise is that of Julia Stiles as Ophelia, whose great mad scene is staged at the Guggenheim Museum, used as well as ever it has been used in a movie. The cityscape of great skyscrapers and spare, shiny, lifeless modern interiors is just right for the staging of much of the action, and the use of technology, of tape machines, phones, videocams, answering machines, fits perfectly into the contemporary mis-en-scene. Not better than amore traditional approach, just more of our era, this is one "Hamlet" that should entice into the Bard's work a new audience.

Herb Jason, 86, realizes a lifelong dream when the memorial to lightkeepers Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine was unveiled on Government Island on Sunday.

By Bill Hutton
CORRESPONDENT

For the last of their 20 years, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson toiled in obscurity on the first Minot Ledge lighthouse, shining their light on others. On Sunday, however, the spotlight was placed directly on them. In an emotional ceremony held on Government Island, the two men who, "kept a good light" were recognized for their bravery in the face of adversity by the officials and townspeople of Cohasset, most notably Herb Jason, who unveiled a granite monument in their honor.

"These men demonstrated a devotion to duty that any man worth his salt would respect...eventually making the ultimate sacrifice, for their country."

— Captain Blaine Horrocks, US Coast Guard

Jason, 86, a local lobsterman and lifelong resident of Cohasset, spearheaded a four-year lobbying and fund-raising effort, aimed at making his longtime dream of building a monument in honor of the two light keepers become a reality. Assisting Jason in the unveiling of the monument were his brother Kenneth R. Jason and his grandson John Small. The bell was then tolled three times — once each for Joseph Antoine, Joseph Wilson and all other light keepers who perished in the line of duty.

Wigmore Pierson, who served as Master of Ceremonies for the event, in addition to being one the principal organizers, gave a brief history of Minot's Ledge Light. He spoke of the decision, "to erect a light house designed by Captain William Swift on the Minot Ledges" in 1847 which would minimize the loss of lives at sea, which numbered in the thousands, and the eventual hiring of Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti has posted a meeting for 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at which he wants to walk selectmen, lobster pound owners and other interested citizens around the Hagerty property off Parker Avenue.

Move rocks from town right of way

Selectmen have made it official. Residents must move any rocks or other obstacles off town property.

The problem is that most people may not realize that the town owns part of what may be their front yard. Public streets such as North and South Main streets and Forest Avenue are about 20 feet wide, but the town easement extends another ten feet on either side, selectmen said.

What some residents are doing is placing rocks or other obstacles along the street to prevent parking or vehicles from driving on the grass, Selectman Merle Brown said.

He noted that across from the Little League Field, some residents put rocks out near the street.

"It's a serious situation if someone can't pull off the road (because of the obstacle)," selectman Ronnie McMorris said. It's now the policy of the board of selectmen that all obstacles be removed from within the town right-of-way.

Town Manager Mark Haddad has asked town counsel for an opinion on any potential town liability relating to obstacles in the right-of-way.

No more brush

Brush is no longer being accepted at the RTF. Grass clippings and leaves may be placed in the compost pile, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

Feral cats: control and disposition

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Moors Rocks to remain free from development

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Those who want to see one of the last untouched pieces of land along the Jerusalem Road coast preserved can breath a little easier.

The 50-year deed restriction — over the parcel known as Moors Rocks — was extended for another 20 years by neighbors to the property just before the restriction was set to expire.

The extension to the restriction signed by nine neighbors and filed in Dedham land court on Dec. 29 — just before the restriction would have expired at the end of 1999 — came as a surprise to the Cohasset Historical Society that owns the parcel. The society was not informed of the neighbors' action before the fact.

Society president John Hovorka would only say that the matter is now settled.

"What happened was the deed restriction was extended for another 20 years by people that had purchased property that had been part of the Moors Estate," Hovorka said. "That matter is settled and there is nothing more to be said about it other than the fact that people should know the land has been preserved."

Word got out about a month ago that the historical society had elected not to renew the deed restriction, opening the door for possible future development of the property. In an interview last month, Hovorka said that while the society was interested in conserving the property — it didn't want to bind future boards of trustees by putting on another restriction.

Edwin "Ned" Tebbetts, 9 Jerusalem Road Drive, who is one of the neighbors that sought extension of the deed restriction, said the former Moors Estate was subdivided into several lots and the homeowners have covenants in their deeds protecting their water views.

Nancy O'Toole, 13 Haystack Lane, who organized the neighbors' effort, said she was "flabbergasted" that the historical society even considered not renewing the deed restriction. She pointed out that the "viewship" over the piece of property is enjoyed by the entire town. O'Toole said once word surfaced about the historical society's plans, the neighbors hired a lawyer and "hurriedly got the registry."

Although the land continues to be protected, John Hartshorne — who is president of the Cohasset Land Conservation Trust, a private nonprofit group dedicated to preserving land — said the trust is still interested in the property.

"The Conservation Trust would be more comfortable if it were preserved forever," Hartshorne said. The trust is interested in buying the parcel from the historical society but would look for some financial help from others in town, he said.

The trust has made inquiries in the past to purchase the property, which is assessed at nearly $300,000, but the offers including the most recent for $35,000 were rejected by the society, he said.

The historical society that owns the Lothrup House, Capt. John Wilson House and Maritime Museum must maintain the buildings which is a costly endeavor necessitating that the society dip into its endowment fund.

Adelaide Pratt of Cohasset inherited the part of the Moors Estate, which the historical society now owns, from her grandfather, Benjamin Moors. She donated the parcel to the historical society in 1949 because she wanted to see it remain untouched. Back then, there was no conservation trust.

The Jerusalem Road parcel known as Moors Rocks will stay free from development for at least another 20 years.

Inn license expanded

By Dan Gravel
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen voted Tuesday night to grant an expanded liquor and entertainment license to the Red Lion Inn, which was subjected to many amendments and restrictions as a compromise between owners and town residents.

At a hearing last week some residents voiced concern over alcoholic beverages being served at the Lilac House. Selectmen voted 3 to 1 in favor of allowing alcoholic beverages to be served at that location in connection with use of the area as a function room and provided that no alcohol or guest be allowed on the second floor porch on the south side. They also granted an entertainment license for the site which allows only for a live band with no amplified music. Merle Brown was the lone dissenter in both votes, arguing that noise will be a problem.

"I'm going to vote against all motions because I don't think there should be music up there," said Brown.

"You know, Merle, you can't shield yourself from civilization," responded chairman Thomas Callahan jokingly.

Michael Sullivan was the most liberal board member in regard to allowing longer hours of liquor service and entertainment at the inn. He argued that if people pay a substantial amount of money to hold a function at the inn they should not have to worry about being kicked out at an early hour because of too many restrictions.

Speaking on the Lilac House he said, "I'm not sure it's hurting anybody to have a small three-piece band in there. Nobody is going to hear it."

The board's decision was that:

Alcoholic beverages may be served in the restaurant and main bar year round, seven days per week from the hours of 8 a.m. to 1 a.m.

Alcoholic beverages may be served on the South Main Street porch of the main inn building only.

Alcoholic beverages may be served in the basement of the main inn building in connection with a use as a jazz bar. Such service will be permitted year round, Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. (including to 1 a.m. Sunday morning).

Beer and wine may be served in the wine bar/bistro seven days per week from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Alcoholic beverages may be served on the second and third floors of the barn in connection with use of the area as a function room, Sunday through Thursday from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Friday and Saturday 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.

A motion that the noise level at the Lilac House should not exceed a certain level was shot down. Selectmen argued that to choose a specific decibel level which cannot be eclipsed would be completely arbitrary and difficult to monitor.

"How would you want me to enforce this," asked town manager Mark Haddad. "There is a practicality issue here."

Opponents of the Red Lion Inn's expanded liquor license have 10 days to appeal the selectmen's decision to the ABCC.

Rusty Skippers get in tune for Memorial Day

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Rusty Skippers were busy at the Deer Hill School on Monday evening tuning up for the Memorial Day Parade.

The all-town band members will also sport their brand-new, monogrammed golf shirts for the occasion.

Also on hand for the rehearsal was the Deer Hill School band that too, will be participating in the parade, which steps off from the Music Circus parking lot at 10:30 a.m.

Several of the Rusty Skippers have children in the Deer Hill band.

Thanks to a donation from the former Cohasset Harborfest Committee, the Rusty Skippers — which was formed in 1995 as the Harborfest band under the leadership of the late Rev. Edward Atkinson — was able to purchase new music sheets that fit in the lyres of their instruments.

Parade watchers will hear patriotic favorites such as Stars and Stripes Forever, The Marines Hymn and the Battle Hymn of the Republic. The 34-member strong Rusty Skippers will join up with the Deer Hill band at Veterans Memorial Park to play the Star Spangled Banner.

Melinda Murray, who plays the cornet, said being in the band is a lot of fun.

"We're just having a good time and if it sounds good on top of it, that's a plus," she said.

Roger Whitley serves as the drum major.

"The trombone behind me lets me know when I'm out of step," he laughed.

Rob Spofford, whose daughter Virginia is in the Deer Hill School Band, said he'd long given up the trumpet until joining the band four years ago.

"I love it, it's great," he said about being a member of the Rusty Skippers.

Parents in the Rusty Skippers rehearse with their children who are in the Deer Hill School Band. Both bands will march in Monday's Memorial Day Parade. Front row, from left, are Sarah Malone, Virginia Spofford, Samantha Burgoon, John Burgoon, Bea Colman, Wis Murray and Polly Murray. Back row, from left, Dale Malone, Rob Spofford, Amanda Burgoon, Alan Coleman and Betts Murray.

"Everyone is excited to be there. And it has been satisfying for me to have had a hand in making it happen."
— Steve Biagini, band director

"I'm happy to be able to work with adults and music, so the students see that music can happen after the age of 18," he said.

Biagini said working with the Rusty Skippers is rewarding.

"Everyone is excited to be there," he said. "And it has been satisfying for me to have had a hand in making it happen."

The Rusty Skippers are also scheduled to play at the Relay For Life, June 9-10, sponsored by the American Cancer Society, at the high school athletic field, and at the Festival for the Arts later in June.

Glenn Pratt is keynote speaker

Memorial Day observances are Monday

Glenn Pratt of King Street, a veteran of the US Coast Guard, will talk about "The Forgotten War" – the Korean War – at Veterans Memorial Park on Monday.

Pratt, who serves as a lieutenant in the Coast Guard from 1966-1972, was the driving force behind the town's dedicating town squares back in 1996 in honor of Cohasset soldiers killed in the Vietnam and the Korean wars.

While in the Coast Guard, Pratt spend three years as aide to Cohasset's Gen. Edward Logan, commander of the 26th Division Mass. National Guard, known as the "Yankee Division."

Back in 1969, Pratt – a 1965 CHS gradate — with others, helped get town meeting to appropriate funds to build the memorial at Veterans park that lists Cohasset soldiers who died in all the nation's wars. That memorial was dedicated 30 years ago.

Events on Memorial Day start at 8 a.m. when veterans travel by bus to visit cemeteries in town for a 21-gun salute and taps. There will also be ceremonies by the flagpole at the Hull Street honor roll.

At 10:30 a.m., marchers re-group at the Music Circus where they are joined by the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, Deer Hill School Band, Rusty Skippers marching band, and other troops. Then the march continues on foot to Cohasset Central Cemetery then travels down North Main Street to the World War I Memorial on the town common. The POW memorial at Depot Court is the next destination. Finally, the parade wends its way down Elm Street to Veterans Memorial Park.

A final ceremony that includes Pratt's address and the raising of the American flag will be held at Veterans Memorial Park by Kimball's at the harbor at about noon.

Lightkeepers barbecue follows Memorial parade

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation invites everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day Parade May 29 at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot's Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is leased from the town, but maintained and operated by the Lightkeepers Corporation.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements or improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge.

This will be the fourth year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters and CLC expects to serve about 1,000 people again.

For more information, call R. M. Campbell, president of CLC, at 383-1379.

EDITORIAL

Lest we forget

Monday is Memorial Day, a day set aside to honor Americans who have died in combat or as a result of their military service. Since the first Memorial Day was observed in 1868 to honor Civil War dead, the world has seen an endless, bloody parade of world wars, civil wars, invasions and occupations in every corner.

On America's grim honor roll of war, we count more than 25,000 killed and 8,445 wounded in the American Revolution; almost 1 million dead and wounded in the ranks of the North and South in the Civil War; more than 320,000 dead and wounded in World War I; more than 1 million casualties in World War II; more than 157,000 dead and wounded in the Korean War; more than 200,000 casualties in Vietnam; and thousands more in skirmishes, firefights and terrorist attacks since the Vietnam War ended.

The American Legion counts more than 1 million American men and women as having given their lives for our country since the Revolution, with millions more injured in action.

Since the Vietnam War, the U.S. has engaged in more high-tech encounters and limited "engagements," meaning the roll call of American dead and injured has dropped considerably. If we continue as the world's police force, the defining events such as Vietnam and Korea — with their impact on entire generations — fade farther into our history. As each generation of veterans passes, the young people who are left don't hold onto the memory and honor the sacrifices with the fervor of their fathers and mothers.

It is up to the younger generations to remember the sacrifices, to attach a story to each veteran whose name is engraved on the plaque at town hall, the marker on the common, the sign on the intersection up the block or in the pages or a high school yearbook from years gone by. It's just as important for young people to listen to and learn from the stories their parents and grandparents can tell them about the horrors of war and the wonders of peace, before those family members are gone.

On Monday, we urge everyone to take a few minutes to remember the ultimate sacrifice made by America's veterans. They died to preserve our freedom. If we honor them, they did not die in vain.

The fall of Saigon was 25 years ago. But for those of us old enough to remember, the photographs of the helicopter perched atop the American Embassy as a line of South Vietnamese citizens made a last, desperate grasp for freedom remain fresh in our minds.

And so do the faces of our sons, brothers, nephews, cousins, classmates and friends who gave their lives over there.

Young Cohasset men like Peter J. Albiani, Jr., Peter Cogill, Allen F. Keating, William C. Laidlaw, John P. Lyon, Richard E. Maree, Dennis J. Reardon and Craig M. Simeone are forever memorialized on the honor roll at Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor.

We'll never know what they would have become if they'd had the chance to realize their full potential. Sadly – like so many other soldiers in so many wars – their lives were cut short.

Yet while their comrades — many now with gray hair — march on Monday, they remain forever young.

More than a quarter century may have passed but we still miss them.

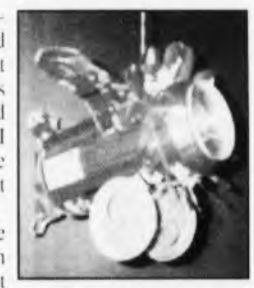
COHASSET CARES

Current events

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

At least four area happenings constitute fodder for this week's column: Veteran Volunteer Recycler Fred Blossom's retirement; Cohasset High's display case featuring student creations made from soda cans; Deer Hill students Joanna Hamilton and Krystal Hudson's receiving awards from the Recycling Committee; and the Voluntary Simplicity group's concern about the RTF 'boutique.'

We don't appreciate someone until he's gone. Especially if it's Fred Blossom, who for a long time now has given many, many hours of his time to the town of Cohasset and its Boy Scouts in the form of patiently sorting out the refundable cans and bottles at the RTF. Having just returned from the RTF, where I found the Scout building overflowing with unsorted refundables and put in several hours doing what Fred has been doing, I got an idea of the monumental debt we owe Fred.



Someone else who has been doing excellent work is CHS art teacher Bonnie Muir, who has led her students through a most creative and productive hands-on recycling project using soda cans. The photographs here are just a tease; the craftwork is super; go up and see for yourself! The display case is just to the left of the main office.

Two youngsters who saw and then nurtured are Deer Hill students Joanna Hamilton and Krystal Hudson, who visited the Cohasset RTF on a field trip back in the fall. Over the winter they raised the biggest and best plants grown in RTF compost given them on the trip and so won the awards for their outstanding work. The awards, by the way, were made, appropriately enough, from some local restaurant placemats.

And speaking of growing things, our local Voluntary Simplicity group is prospering, you might say. The Cohasset Cares piece on V.S. created more feedback than any other column I've written, and the subject clearly deserves further separate treatment. People have asked, again appropriately enough, for a simple definition of V.S. Here's one: Reducing complications in favor of the basics. Or this: The search to reduce clutter, both material and abstract, in order to re-appreciate time, family, the earth, and spirituality. Now that I've used up all this space, all I can say for now about the RTF 'boutique' ['Swap Shop' or 'Take it or leave it shop'] is that the V.S. group agree it's an important and dandy part of our town! Stay tuned. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Town build-out analysis greeted with skepticism

By Dan Gravel
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen discussed the recently completed buildout analysis with representatives from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs at Tuesday night's board meeting and the reliability of the state's findings seems to be up in the air.

"This is about preserving and enhancing the quality of life in Massachusetts towns," said George Zoto of the EOEA.

The analysis was done to calculate the maximum possible residential, commercial and industrial growth based on local zoning, and illustrates the impacts that growth will have on school construction, traffic, water and sewer capacity and consumption of open space. Zoto said the buildout analysis could take the place of a the town's master plan, referring to a comment made earlier in the evening by selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan who said of the master plan committee, "That committee is in disarray at the moment.

"Cohasset is an extremely desirable community and it has been virtually picked clean. I say this having seen every attempt at development for the last 17 years."

Robert Sturdy, planning board

As part of the EOEA's community preservation effort, they are completing analyses for all 351 cities and towns in the commonwealth.

Zoto said he hopes the work will initiate a dialogue between state agencies and communities and give recognition to the relationships between environmental protection, economic development, transportation and construction.

The conclusion of the analysis is that at full buildout Cohasset's population could jump by 2,652 residents from 8,117 in 1998; the number of students could increase to 1,699 from 1,240; households could increase from 2,801 in 1998 to 3,837; and at buildout 932,212 gallons of water could be used every day, up from 647,781.

The EOEA does not associate a projected time period with the analysis.

"Community preservation is really about the future and the children and what we set aside," said Zoto.

Selectman chairman Thomas Callahan called the buildout figures, "a worst case scenario," and said that people should not expect the town to grow by a third any time soon.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy disagreed with the results of the analysis.

"There is a lot of data in the town that I feel should have been used," he said. "One of the development constraints is topography and wetland areas.

"Over the last 10 years we have had very close to zero percent population growth...and a decrease in the number of people per housing unit...Cohasset is an extremely desirable community and it has been virtually picked clean. I say this having seen every attempt at development for the last 17 years."

Sturdy said he has spoken with developers who have told him there is very little land left in town that is suitable for development.

"Although we've seen very little change, there is change we can foresee on the horizon," argued Zoto, citing the new development at Rose Hill, possible revisions of Title V and use of the Greenbush rail line.

A "Super Summit" will be held on June 17, in Middleborough where representatives from many communities will gather to discuss buildout and community preservation.

thought was one of the final roadblocks to the rail project that has been mired in environmental studies for a decade.

Greenbush is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad restoration project. The other two lines to Plymouth and Middleboro started service in September 1997.

"The amendment in essence would prevent the MBTA from further pursuing Greenbush," Hedlund said.

If the amendment fails, it won't be because of any lack of effort by Hedlund. The senator has been working behind the scenes lobbying his democratic counterparts to see his point of view.

"I've asked them to look at the facts," Hedlund said.

The facts, according to Hedlund, are that the project is an over-priced boondoggle that would be of limited benefit.

"It's is a massive amount of money," he said about the project estimated to cost as much as $408 million. "The benefits of the project can be achieved through alternatives for less money."

Rail-opponents like Hedlund have long touted a multi-modal approach to the region's transportation problems that would include expanded ferry and bus service. Proponents see the rail project as the most efficient alternative to the area's traffic gridlock.

But whatever may happen with the amendment, Hingham selectmen — who agreed not to do anything to actively oppose Greenbush restoration — said they were sticking by the deal they hammered out with the MBTA.

"That agreement was made with a certain degree of trust of both sides," selectmen chairman Martin Crane said. "And we intend to carry it out."

Scituate officials feel differently. Chairman Ralph Crossen said if Hedlund's latest push stopped the train Scituate would celebrate.

"I applaud Senator Hedlund for going forward with an attempt like this," Crossen said Wednesday. "This reflects what the citizens of Scituate and the board wants, which is no train in Scituate."

Still, Crossen said he and fellow board members are being practical at this point and moving forward in negotiations with the MBTA as if the train is still coming to town.

"We're realists," he said. "It does not appear the votes are there for this to carry through. We have a direction and an agenda and we're moving forward with heavy mitigation discussions until we finish our job. But if something happened along the way to stop the project, we'd pop the champagne."

While Hedlund realizes the future of the amendment lies in the hands of the senate leadership — which will decide whether or not to support it — he hopes that leadership will see the merits of his proposal.

That's because as of July 1, the MBTA will have to be more accountable for the money it spends.

Under so-called "forward funding," the MBTA must live within a fixed budget — paid for through fares, state tax revenue and assessments to cities and towns — rather than submitting a bill to the legislature after the fact.

That, coupled with a recommendation from a Blue Ribbon Commission, chaired by former state Sen. Pat McGovern, that the MBTA use its capital funds to upgrade, repair and modernize its existing facilities, should get the attention of legislators, Hedlund said.

"The commission recommended the T cease all further new capital projects and put resources into its existing service that needs attention like the Red Line stations, Green Line modernization and automated fares," Hedlund said. That, he said has captured the attention of Boston legislators.

Jon Carlisle, spokesman for state transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, said the MBTA can fit Greenbush in under its borrowing cap.

"The project is so far along and has been programmed into the capital plan that we want to pursue it," Carlisle said. He said Sullivan does not disagree with the recommendations of the Blue Ribbon Commission and once rail service is built to Greenbush, and to Fall River and New Bedford, then the focus will be more on maintenance.

"We want to put the final pieces in place before we take that tact," Carlisle said.

He said electrifying the Greenbush line would be cost prohibitive.

Carlisle said the transportation office sees Hedlund's amendment as an attempt to kill Greenbush.

"We'll will wait and see how it plays out in the legislature, but the signals we're getting is that it will not pass," he said.

But regardless of what the legislature does, Hedlund relishes the opportunity to actually vote on the Greenbush project, which he is, convinced hindsight will show is a waste of money and effort.

"It's the first opportunity I will have to vote on the project since I've been in office," he said. "That's why I offered the amendment. Not only to vent on the issue and to educate my colleagues a little, but it's an opportunity to vote.

"At least I will have had the opportunity to go on record in opposition to this boondoggle," he said.

If the Senate should pass the amendment, the proposal would then go to conference committee where differences between the House and Senate versions of the budget are ironed out.

West Corner bridge needs critical repairs

"If something happens to the bridge all three towns will be seriously impacted," Stratoti said.

However, it's not a given the state will pick up the tab because the "bridge" is really classified as a culvert because of it's not wide enough to qualify as a bridge. And records show that the bridge was built by the county further clouding the issue, Stratoti said.

"The state doesn't take responsibility for culverts," he said.

The percentage of ownership among the three towns also isn't clear. In other words how much of the bridge Hingham, Hull and Cohasset are each responsible for — is another issue that may affect getting money for repairs.

The bridge houses the main gate and control facility for Straits Pond. There are also two water mains — an 8 in. and a 20 in. that supply water to Hull and an 8-in. gas main that connects between the three towns that run under the bridge.

In addition, the bridge provides the only access via Rte. 228 to the state beach in Hull, one resident pointed out.

The ceiling under the bridge is flaking exposing the metal supports to the elements and they could rust out, Stratoti said.

He and McNamara stressed that if repairs aren't employed soon the cost could climb.

"The bridge has very heavy traffic usage from commuters, visitors and commercial traffic to Hull as well as heavy equipment, buses, dump trucks, etc.," the report states. "The vibration from heavy traffic usage will cause the bridge to deteriorate at a faster rate now that it has been undermined and could result in very costly repairs if not repaired in the near future."

The watershed association decided to submit the report to town officials in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Selectmen split on lobster pound vote

plan. "My main concern with this is allowing commercial or retail development on town property...You're going to be using that land for purposes that are in direct conflict with the purposes for which we bought it."

Some of the attendees disparaged using the land as a parking lot.

"We are the only community that doesn't have parking for access to the harbor," Sullivan responded. "The harbor is one of the aspects of this community that draws people to the community. Everyone talks as if it is a bad idea this is a parking lot. I thinks it's a good idea."

Sullivan conceded that the lot is empty a large percentage of the time, but said that in nice weather people use it.

"These guys get to use this 12 months a year," lobsterman William Oliver shot back. "They're going to get more of a benefit out of it."

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan wanted to make clear that it is not truly a board issue, but merely "an idea worth discussing." He said anger from lobstermen should not be directed at selectmen.

"Let's not make this adversarial. We're being put between a rock and a hard place with this proposal. This decision is being made by private business interests and it's being thrust on us."

However, Callahan voted in favor of Alioto and DiNatale using the Hagerty property, explaining, "We have a commercial fishing industry in town. I think it's something we need to preserve."

He qualified his remarks by saying, "The government can't solve all the problems. This is essentially a private business matter."

Fred Koed also sided with the lobstermen.

"I don't think we can vote against what it (the property) is zoned for," he said, noting that a commercial lobster pound would be an allowable use under Cohasset's current zoning.

Town manager Mark Haddad stated that if the town was to allow the Hagerty property site to be leased it would have to be put out to bid, meaning that the Cohasset Lobster Pound might not necessarily be the business which would occupy the site.

CNC will bid for Patriot Ledger, Enterprise and MPG group

the Enterprise at $40 million.

The Ledger, New England's largest daily evening newspaper, has a daily circulation of 70,000 and a weekend circulation of 85,000. It was founded 164 years ago as a weekly and now circulates in 26 communities.

The Enterprise, founded in 1880, has a daily circulation of 43,000 and sells 52,000 Sunday papers in 28 communities. MPG operates the Reporter weekly chain in several South Shore towns, as well as Plymouth's weekly paper, the Old Colony Memorial.

The timing of the sale is good for CNC, Davis said.

"The company has been doing very well, and I am delighted we are in a position to consider this. This would provide some exciting opportunities in career advancement for our employees," Davis said.

Local journalism veterans say competition for the papers may be fierce. The Ledger's circulation has dropped in recent years, but it remains the South Shore's paper of record, and the Enterprise and MPG complement its reach and coverage.

"The Ledger has always been a very good daily newspaper," said Mark Leccese, journalism lecturer at Boston University. "The Boston media all reads it. The TV stations all read it. Everybody at the State House reads it."

William Ketter, chairman of the journalism department at Boston University, said the papers will be attractive to several companies with holdings in eastern Massachusetts. Ketter served as the Ledger's editor for more than 20 years before leaving the paper in 1998.

Possible suitors may include:

Ottaway Newspapers Inc., owner of the New Bedford Standard-Times and Cape Cod Times.

Journal Register Newspapers, owner of the Herald News of Fall River; the Taunton Daily Gazette; the Times of Pawtucket, R.I.; and the Call of Woonsocket, R.I.

MediaNews Group Inc., owned by William Dean Singleton, owner of the Lowell Sun, the Sentinel & Enterprise of Fitchburg and the Berkshire Eagle in Pittsfield.

The Boston Herald, which is reportedly looking for new relationships or partnerships in the suburban market.

Herald Publisher Patrick Purcell told his paper this morning, "We're going to take a look at it. We'll see if it makes sense. Needless to say, there are some obvious advantages to doing something with a competitor so close."

One player expected to be largely absent from the talks: The New York Times Co., owner of the Boston Globe and the Worcester Telegram & Gazette. Ketter and Leccese said they're not sure the South Shore papers would complement the Globe.

"I don't know if (the South Shore papers) would bring much more than what the Globe already has in that market, unlike Worcester, which is in central Massachusetts and kind of a market unto itself," Ketter said.

New York investment bank Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette has been engaged to advise Pilgrim and investors on the sale process, which is to begin immediately.

The sale is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

"It will be interesting to see, now that they've thrown the ball up again, who comes down with it," Leccese said.

Bradley admonishes House republicans

Former Plymouth County prosecutor and current Democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley announced May 23 his objection to State House Republicans' attempt to hold up the Big Dig bailout plan. Although the plan was passed by the House and the Senate and signed into law last week, the plan faced serious opposition from House Republicans.

"A Republican administration made this mess," stated Bradley. "And just as Democrats were working hard to find a way to bail out the State, House Republicans were protesting without suggesting any viable alternatives."

Bradley continues to actively campaign throughout the district by going to door-to-door and speaking with voters directly. For more information about the HOPE Plan, Garrett Bradley and his campaign for sState representative, residents can call Michael Salerno at the Bradley headquarters at 781-740-7272 or check out the web site at http://www.garrettbradley.com

Holden campaign headquarters set

Mike Holden, a Democratic candidate for state representative in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset announced the opening of his campaign headquarters. The campaign headquarters is located at 4 North St. in Hingham Harbor. The office provides those who are volunteering to help with Holden's candidacy, a central location to organize their efforts.

"We have grown to the point where it simply isn't manageable to meet at someone's home or office, as generous as those offers are," Holden said. "Having a central headquarters ensures that we can continue to operate in an organized and efficient manner, and that the valuable time being donated by everyone is spent productively." The campaign headquarters will serve as a location to assist in the everyday activities of the campaign, including making phone calls, sending out literature and organizing special events. It also provides voters with a place to call or drop in and get information.

Holden welcomes visitors to stop by the 4 North St. address, next door to the Liberty Grille, or to call the headquarters at 740-0035.

McKenna meets voters in district

Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for state representative for Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset, recently began walking door-to-door through the 3rd Plymouth District to introduce herself to the voters.

"I am pleased with the reception I am getting when visiting the homes of voters," she said. "It is clear to me that people are eager to know who the candidates are, and where we stand on particular issues affecting this district. Many residents have also expressed a desire to have as their next state representative, someone whom they feel will be accessible, and who will have the time to take phone calls and to meet with the concerned citizens they are representing."

McKenna intends to devote some time each day to her door-to-door efforts. "I want to meet with all the voters in the district and discuss issues important to each person in every neighborhood."

Citizens have also had an opportunity to speak with her at various local events, most recently the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year awards ceremony, the lighthouse memorial dedication in Cohasset, and the Hull Lifesaving Museum's rowing race from Charlestown to Hull.

For further information or to volunteer with the McKenna Campaign, please call Mary Anne at 749-5004, Billy Ramsey at 749-2532, or Nancy Wilkinson at 383-0187.

Skippers make state tournament for first time in four years

Since Cohasset is going to the state Div. 3 baseball tournament for the first time in four years, the Skippers decided to arrive in style.

Sophomore Nick Bolster was terrific Monday in throwing a complete game no-hitter against Provincetown in an 8-0 win which secured Cohasset's first postseason berth since 1997.

Bolster, a righthander, recorded nine strikeouts with five walks. His effort was Cohasset's second no-hitter of the season, after senior Greg O'Keeffe recorded one over South Shore Voc. Tech last month.

"I didn't even know about it until someone told me."

Usually pitchers become very stiff during potential no-hitters, not talking to anyone in the dugout between innings. Bolster however, stayed calm and collected for all seven innings.

"I didn't even know about it until someone told me," he said of the no-hitter.

The win gave Cohasset a record of 10-8, officially qualifying the Skippers for postseason play with two games to go. A team must have a .500 record or better to make the state tournament.

"We are definitely peaking at the right time," said sophomore Robin Murphy. "I have been wanting this ever since I was a freshman."

If Cohasset can win its last two games of the season, including a very tough matchup against Norwell, they would record the best Cohasset varsity record since 1964.

Bolster sat down 12 in a row between the first and fifth innings, as only two players reached as far as second base for Provincetown the whole afternoon.

The game ended on a suspenseful note, however, with sophomore JV call-up Matt Ogrodnik making a running catch in right field to save Bolster's no-hitter.

"I thought it was a base hit," said a relieved Bolster, more pleased with his team getting the win than with his own personal accomplishments. "I really thought it was a double down the line, but Matt made a sweet play to save it."

Cohasset, meanwhile, provided plenty of offensive support, scoring five runs before Provincetown could record the first out of the first inning.

"Everyone played well," said Bolster, who was excited about his team's three-game winning streak, which comes on the heels of dropping five in a row. "We lost five straight, and everyone seemed to get down because we are a young team. But some of our older guys really stepped up."

In addition to his pitching gem, Bolster led the offense, reaching

Girls tennis has 28-match league winning streak stopped

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After 28 consecutive South Shore League victories, the Cohasset girls tennis team suffered its first defeat in nearly three seasons on Tuesday, losing 3-2 to Norwell.

The Skippers compiled perfect 10-0 league records in both 1998 and 1999 and were 8-0 this season heading into the Norwell match.

Cohasset's record dropped to 8-1 on the season, with one match left to go on the schedule.

"It's disappointing," said Cohasset coach Gigi Meehan. "But it's not a matter of us losing, they just wanted it more and won it."

Freshman Lindsay Grossman, who at second singles has not dropped so much as a set this year, defeated Kate Truesdell of Norwell, 6-2, 6-1.

At second doubles, Cohasset's undefeated pair of Kelly Stone and Jessica Niessink thrashed Norwell's second doubles team, Julie O'Donnell and Kirk Tallman, 6-0, 6-0.

"At any other school, they [Stone and Niessink] would be first doubles," said varsity coach Gigi Meehan.

"It's disappointing. But it's not a matter of us losing, they just wanted it more and won it."

Senior Kate Stone, playing first singles, was defeated by sophomore sensation Sara Bitetti from Norwell 6-4, 6-1.

Despite a recent loss to Marshfield's Katherine Ehle, Bitetti has been dubbed as the best female tennis player in the state by some coaches across the league.

"She's incredible," said Meehan. "She is a nice player, nice kid, too. I do enjoy watching her play. She's out there spanking everyone, and she does it with such elegance."

Norwell's first doubles team, Ashley Dye and Erika Schmidt, downed Cohasset's Ary Afshar and Jessie Zerendow, 6-4, 6-4. Afshar, a junior, and senior Zerendow have only lost three matches this season.

"I really hope they make All-Star, especially this being Jessie's last year," said Meehan.

The only three set match of the afternoon was a fiercely competitive contest between Cohasset freshman Julie Shea and Norwell's Jen Gallagher.

After dropping the first set in a tiebreaker, 7-6, Shea bounced back to win the second set 6-0. The final set went right down to the wire, two games reaching at least five deuces, but Gallagher prevailed, 6-4, giving Norwell the 3-2 victory.

The match was a payback of sorts for Norwell, who Cohasset had beaten 4-1 just six days earlier. In that match, Bitetti was the only Norwell player able to secure a point.

Though Cohasset lost its perfect season on Tuesday, they are still eagerly looking forward to a high seed in the state tournament.

"Every year it just gets better and better," said Meehan, who in nine years as a coach has never had a losing season with Cohasset.

This season has been very special to not only Meehan, but also the players, as they play almost every match against schools much larger than Cohasset.

"My whole job as a coach is to spark an interest. We only have 12 girls which definitely has its pluses and minuses," stated Meehan, referring to the fact that middle schoolers are no longer to compete at the varsity level. "We used to base our strength on the seventh and eighth graders."

One of the 'pluses' Meehan referred to is that on a small team, some of the less experienced, weaker players get more court time than they would on a large team.

The downside is that with a large team, there is more talent from which to choose a roster.

Still, Meehan realizes Cohasset's players have done a phenomenal job with the talent they have, which is considerable.

"It is not my goal to have kids that aspire to go to the Olympics," she said, "but if they do, I want them to remember me when they are standing on the podium."

Krupczak and Parker lead Cohasset track resurgence

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

When reading about a Cohasset boys track and field victory, two names are likely to appear early and often.

The multi-talented duo of senior Craig Parker and junior Brian Krupczak has led a track resurgence at Cohasset High.

In both of the last two years, Parker and Krupczak have led the way to 5-1 finishes in the South Shore League, good for second place.

"They set the example for everyone else to follow."
Boys track coach Al LaFountain

"They're both my captains and they're the hardest working two kids I have," said boys track coach Al LaFountain. "They set the example for everyone else to follow."

Not only all Parker and Krupczak hard workers, they happen to be outstanding athletes as well. In a dual meet, it is not unusual for both to win first-place in three individual events and win a fourth first as part of Cohasset's outstanding 4x100-meter relay team with Khalil Madyun and Steve Laney.

Parker is a three-sport star, big enough to play offensive and defensive lineman on the football team, but fast enough to win the 100-meter dash at most dual meets. He was also the starting center on the basketball team.

"Parker's got a weird combination of events," said LaFountain. "He's outstanding in the discus and shot put, but then he'll go to the track and win the 100. That's not something you see too often."

Initially, Parker became involved in track and field his freshman year sim-

Boys tennis heading into homestretch

By Brian Brennan

The Cohasset boys tennis team lost a close match with Abington last Thursday, leaving the boys 4-6 with one scheduled match left to go.

The boys are likely out of the tournament hunt, as teams must have a .500 record or better to qualify, but the Skippers have performed admirably, even winning matches shorthanded.

Without a third singles player, Cohasset has been forced to default a point in each of its recent matches.

Against Abington, the doubles teams of Greg O'Connell and Joe Niessink and Jeff Garber and Ben Bixby both won, while Chris Golden lost a close 7-5, 6-4 match at second singles and Brian Tracy was defeated at first singles.

Usually, that would mean the match would come down to third singles, but Cohasset had to forfeit the crucial point, losing the match in the process.

Against Carver last week, however, the team showed it could win even when forfeiting a point.

Both doubles teams were victorious and Golden came through with a huge 6-2, 6-0 win to give the Skippers the victory.

"We were down two points, but the guys were really huge with the match on the line," said coach Roger Tait. "They're figuring out how to make their own breaks."

Aside from the team's small numbers, the team's relative inexperience in tennis has been a hurdle to overcome this season. Whereas many local schools field teams with year-round tennis players, many of the Skippers do not pick up their rackets until tennis begins in the spring.

"Most members of our team do play other sports, which means we're a little rusty the first couple weeks of the season," Tait said. "But once the start, the guys do show a good amount of dedication. And playing other sports does bring a fitness level, which certainly helps in tennis."

As the rust has fallen off in the middle of the season, tait said the team has really responded and is playing well.

"The confidence level has been really up," Tait said. "The win over Carver was huge. The team is really developing to the potential we've always known is there."

base four times with three singles, two runs scored, two stolen bases, and an RBI.

Murphy continued his recent hot streak with a double, two singles, two runs scored, and an RBI.

The 14-hit barrage gave Cohasset 21 runs in their last two games, as they trampled Abington last Wednesday 13-4.

In that win, sophomore Chris Caron smacked an inside-the-park home run, legged out a triple, and hit a single, coming a double shy of hitting for the cycle.

Senior Joe Pergola also hit a round tripper in what was one of Cohasset's most impressive offensive outputs of the season.

Doug O'Brien, the South Shore league's third-leading hitter with a .424 average, was 4-5 with two runs scored, while O'Keeffe struck out 12 Green Wave batters in six innings.

With the bats coming alive and two pitchers who have no-hitters on their respective resumes, Cohasset could be a dark horse pick to make some noise in the state tournament.

South Shore ARC Golf Tournament

Tuesday, June 27th will mark the 13th Anniversary of South Shore ARC's Lou Bailey Golf Outing at Lakeville Country Club. "Support for this Tournament keeps building every year, not only in Cohasset but all over the South Shore," according to Kathleen Bailey, of Cohasset, co-chair of the event along with Loretta Oliva who is Vice President/Loan Servicing Officer for South Shore Savings Bank.

Other Cohasset members of the committee include Jean and Lou Bailey who founded the Tournament. Anyone interested in participating should contact South Shore ARC at (781) 335-3023, ext. 120.

Funds raised will help underwrite services provided by South Shore ARC of Weymouth (Association for Retarded Citizens). "Our goal is to outdo last year's Tournament by having more fun and raising even more money for South Shore ARC," according to Bailey.

South Shore Savings Bank is corporate sponsor. Fallon Ambulance is the barbecue host. South Shore Buick of Quincy is providing a hole-in-one prize of a Buick automobile, and Dan Flynn is the volunteer auctioneer. There are two additional hole-in-one prizes of $25,000 and a $5,000 savings bonds.

Other Cohasset residents who are members of the South Shore ARC Board of Directors in addition to Jean Bailey are Maria Plante and Norma Grassey who serves as President.

ply as a means of conditioning for the fall football season.

"The football coach, Tom Hughes, used to be the track coach as well," Parker said. "He encouraged me to do track as something to keep in shape. Once I started with it, I really got into it. Basically, you need strength and speed in all of the sports I do, so that's what I've tried to work on."

In the fall, Parker will take his athletic talents to Middlebury College in Vermont, where he will be a defensive lineman on the school's football team.

Before he heads to college, however, he still has some business to take care of on the track. Parker has qualified for this weekend's Class C state meet in Norwell in the discus, shot put, 100-meter dash, and the 4x100-meter relay.

Krupczak, meanwhile, has qualified in an eye-popping five events, showing just how versatile both athletes are. A sprinter and jumper, Krupczak qualified in the 100-meter dash, 200-meter dash, long jump, triple jump and 4x100-meter relay.

"I'm trying to qualify in as many things as I can," Krupczak said. "I'm hoping to do this in college, so I figure the more qualifying times and marks I can get, the better it will look to colleges. I'm hoping track will help me get into a good school."

Like Parker, Krupczak was a starter on this year's football team, playing fullback. But track is by far his favorite sport.

"Track's a lot more laid-back," he said. "There's more down time. Football's so intense all the time."

Interestingly, one of the most intense moments in sports is when a sprinter readies himself in the starting blocks, waiting to explode when the gun sounds.

It's not unusual for nervous sprinters to false-start a couple of times trying to get the slightest edge over the opposition.

Krupczak, however, said he doesn't get nervous at all in the starting blocks.

"I don't feel anything," said Krupczak, who is undefeated in the league in the 200-meter dash for the last two years. "When I hear that shot, I just start moving. It's all instinct."

At the Class C meet this Saturday and the All-State meet next Saturday, both at Norwell High, Krupczak is limited to one running event, one jumping event and one relay.

He will run the 200-meter dash, do the long jump and run the 4x 100-meter relay.

"The triple jump just kills your legs, especially your shins with the three jumps," he said. "The 200 is my bread-and-butter. It's definitely my favorite."

Krupczak is so good at the 200 that many league caches choose to keep their better sprinters out of that race.

"A lot of coaches don't even put kids in that event, they'll just concede it," LaFountain said. "When I went to pick the league all-stars [both Parker and Krupczak were selected], the coaches were not very pleased to hear Brian was only a junior."

While many think of the 100-meter dash as the most glamorous sprinting event, Krupczak took an analytical approach toward figuring out which sprint to focus on.

"You need a lot of muscle mass in the 100, whereas you need more endurance in the 200," he said. "I'm not the biggest kid, I'm like 160 pounds. I could tell the 200 would be my best event."

While both Parker and Krupczak do extremely well in individual events, they get most excited when talking about the 4x100-meter relay team.

"We've got four guys on our team who are pretty fast," Parker said. "We've got a decent chance to go pretty far."

"The big thing we're working on right now is the relay team," Krupczak added. "We're working on getting the handoffs coordinated. I think we can do really well at the All-States."

Their focus on the relay team is just one way Krupczak and Parker have taken a leadership role. The track team has seen a major resurgence in the last two years, and just completed a wildly successful league season in which the Skippers went 5-1 in the South Shore League.

"We're trying to set a tone on both the girls and the guys teams," Parker said. "It's not just Brian and I, either. It's Tim Baird taking charge of the distance runners, Stefan Vanderweil with the hurdlers and Khalil Madyun with the sprinters. We're holding our own now. It's been a lot of fun."

"This team is more disciplined than ever before," Krupczak said. "I think people see what we have to do to win, and they do it."

LaFountain said his captains have been all he could ask for.

"I'll tell you one thing, I'm definitely going to miss Craig next year," he said. "Both he and Brian have a phenomenal work ethic, both on the track and in the classroom."

At the All-State meet next Saturday, the two stars are likely to give their coach some more thrills.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

From tragedy to triumph

Scituate's Wayne Ross tells his story while promoting helmet safety

By Liz Lawrence
STAFF REPORTER

All eyes are fixed on him as he slowly moves his wheelchair into the center of an auditorium filled with nine year-olds.

With the Guinness Book of World Records firmly in his grasp, Scituate native Wayne Ross takes a journey back three years in time and begins to tell his story to students at the Osgood school in Cohasset.

"I am the only person who still got in the Guinness Book of World records, without setting a record," said a cheerful Ross, bringing his audience to laughter.

Ross is referring to the 16,000-mile bicycling odyssey he and partner Christopher "Spike" Ramsden set out upon three years ago to raise money for the Multiple Sclerosis Foundation and to break a world record. Ross never finished the ride from Alaska to Argentina — it was cut short when he was struck by a bus in Guatemala City and his injuries left him paralyzed from the waist down. Ramsden finished the ride and earned a spot for himself and Ross in the Guinness Book of World Records.

Three years ago said Ross, my biggest goals were to get in the Guinness Book of World Records and help people who that had multiple sclerosis (MS). "It's ironic that I am now the one in a wheelchair."

While Ross never made it to the end of that cycling trip, he has since embarked on a new adventure. Turning tragedy into triumph, Ross now reaches out to school age children, and teaches them about helmet safety, and the benefits of physical fitness.

"There were two things that saved my life in the bus crash," said Ross, to the students who have fallen silent. "I was in the best shape of my life at the time, and my helmet."

"Wear your helmets," Ross told the youngsters. "Even if you are roller blading or doing anything really fast." Ross said that riding a bike was not the only time it was necessary. He said that helmets could help prevent the most serious head injuries, and if a person was in a serious accident they were less likely to suffer brain damaged if they are wearing one.

"I would have been dead or worse off if I did have this on during the accident," said Ross, holding up the bent helmet he was wearing on the day of the accident.

With that, the children could not contain their curiosity anymore.

"What did it feel like?," shouted out one girl.

"Did it hurt?," another boy chimed in.

Ross was honest with the youngsters.

"It was very painful," he said. To illustrate his point further, Ross showed the students TV footage of the accident, capturing their full attention. The video showed Ross in the hospital bed shortly after the accident, remaining very hopeful and positive and giving his friend Spike the go ahead to finish the long trip without him.

Spike set two world records for covering the most distance in the least amount of days for the trip. And he credits Ross with helping him finish the ride. Ross was a veteran at taking long bike trips like these, said Spike noting that the MS ride was his first major trip.

"He taught me everything I know," said Spike. As far as the dramatic turn that Ross has taken to help educate children Spike said, "Wayne is incredible, what he does blows me away."

Cohasset Police Officer Richard Yocum of the Mountain Bike Program, who encouraged Ross to speak to the students is touched by Ross's enthusiasism to help children learn.

"When the kids actually see someone that has had an accident, it makes a big impact on them," he said.

Cohasset Police Officer Christy Tarantino Jr., who has knew Ross for 25 years was equally impressed.

"He has taken a tragedy and turned it into a positive way of reaching out to communities and children," said Tarantino.

While informing children about helmet safety Ross also made them aware of the challenges faced by the handicapped. He showed them how he ate, and what it was like to brush his teeth, and zipper something.

"In three and a half years, I have only fell out of my chair six or seven times, and most of those times were when people insisted on helping me," Ross said with a laugh.

Third grade Osgood teacher Susan Baush said she was glad Ross could talk frankly to the children about safety while making them knowledgeable of what it is like to be handicapped.

"He's used tragedy to turn around and make his life a positive event."

Judging from the children's responses Ross accomplished what he set out to do.

"I never wanted to wear a helmet before, but when I saw how he crashed into a bus, and how it happened so fast, I will wear a helmet now," said third grader Katie Gauner.

Her classmate Danny Martin Jr. said he will be gearing up too.

"I was kind of shivering when I saw the accident, it made me stop and think," he said, adding he will never ride his bike without a helmet again.

Other students who did not have a helmet said they were going home to tell their parents to buy them one. To encourage bicycle safety and cut down on head injuries, South Shore Hospital sells helmets at its gift for just $10, said Ross, who noted patrons must ask about the helmets because they're not on display in the shop. The $10 cost is a substantial savings from local sporting goods stores which sell helmets for $50 to $100.

Ross isn't finished making his rounds just yet. He's spoken to youngsters in Marshfield, Cohasset and Hingham and will be visiting other area schools one to two times each week before school gets out for the summer.

He is also currently speaking at churches and businesses, while keeping up his health and training for the National Disabled Swimming Competition in Indiana. Ross has established several local and national swimming records for the backstroke. He said he swims up to four or five times a week. Ross has also enjoys skiing, scuba diving and deep sea fishing.

His biggest hope for the future said Ross is to help prevent more accidents and to help finance finding a cure for spinal cord injuries.

If any school or organization is interested in having Ross speak, he can be reached at 781-545-3744. Or letters may be e-mailed to wrossma@aol.com.

Spelling Bee breaks its fundraising record

The Cohasset Education Foundation's Sixth Annual Spelling Bee held May 9 at the high school proved once again to be the organization's most successful fund raising event. Speller and sponsor participation, including Cohasset students and generous support of local businesses and private families resulted in raising a record-breaking $17,000, which will enable the CEF to continue to help fund the town's public school programs.

"We think that including student spellers this year made the difference in the funds we raised," said co-chairman Midge Stone. "Businesses were willing to sponsor the kids. There is so much concern that students are missing the mark on MCAS scores and graduating from high school without knowing how to spell or write. It's important to support kids who are talented and interested in mastering language and who get involved in related events like the spelling bee. Supporting them as our community does sends them, and their teachers, a positive message."

Two of the eight student teams made it to the championship round to compete against the school superintendent's team, the school committee and the senior citizens. It was an exciting, sometimes humorous, and intense round for all teams.

"I really wanted the students to beat us," laughed Dr. Ted Malvey, Superintendent of Cohasset Public Schools. "And, it wasn't because I wanted to go home. It would've been great if they had beaten us."

Cohasset student spellers included Courtney Anton, Ali Earon, Rachel Doyle, David Ingber, Megan McCain, Heather Peraino, Elizabeth Stone, Rachel Garber, Andrew Flynn, Courtney Hurley, Colby Durant, Eric Belz, Tim Anton, Jon Downing, Kevin Chang, Brenden Flutter, Charlie Anderson, Terence Hurley, Lindsey Grossman, Ian Kidder, Ross Lieb Lappen, Jared Krupczak, Greg O'Brien, Kelly Stone, Jeff Garber, and Robin Murphy.

First place spellers were the St. Stephen's Church team members Lou Eaton, Sally Slade Warner, and Paul Krupczak. Second place spellers were the ninth and tenth grade spelling team comprised of David Ingber, Megan McCain, and Heather Peraino. The school committee team members, Dr. Ted Malvey, Lynn Degiacomo, and Pat Martin came in third place.

Two of the three hard working spelling bee judges were the principals of the Deer Hill School, Paul Callahan, and the Cohasset High School, Curt Collins.

"It just seemed right to have the school principals as judges," co-chairman Mary Sheppard said. "We were very happy that Mr. Callahan and Mr. Collins agreed to do it. We knew they'd do a good job, and I think it was good for the kids to see them involved like that."

Robert Detwiler of Norwell performed the role of master of ceremonies with professionalism, great wit, and articulation.

"Bob lent an air of dignity, talk show host, me, and folksy humor to the Bee," Stone said. "Another person we were lucky to have involved."

The annual European trip raffle winner this year was Joseph Rigali of Concord. Rigali received roundtrip airfare and seven nights accommodations in Paris.

"A good portion of the funds we raise are from selling $25 raffle tickets," said CEF board member Bernadette Faulkner. "People don't realize how much they help just by buying a raffle ticket. It adds up. Every ticket counts."

This year's CEF fund recipients include the National Honor Society, the Cohasset High School's photography lab, and the Summer Institute 2000, which also received funding in 1999. The Summer Institute 2000 expanded their successful 1999 summer outdoor classrooms from two programs to its currently planned five. Student registration increased significantly after the Institute's first year. Programs that receive support from the Cohasset Education Foundation include those that provide academic recognition, curriculum improvements, and program expansion that benefit Cohasset's public school students.

Since its inception five years ago, the Cohasset Education Foundation raised $10,000 to build the Osgood School's technology lab that was moved to the new school, and $125,000 to build the Foreign Language Lab at the high school. Working with teachers at the Deer Hill School and the high school, the CEF also funded additional reading material that enhances the schools' existing reading curriculum.

The CEF encourages Cohasset public school teachers and administration members to submit their proposals for funding to Dr. Ted Malvey, Superintendent of Schools, for CEF board review.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Bourke L. Corcoran scholarship offered

On June 7, during senior class night, a senior girl and boy each will be awarded the $1,500 Bourke L. Corcoran Scholarship. To qualify for scholarship, students are asked to write an essay on the true meaning of friendship.

The scholarship committee judges each applicant anonymously and only on the merit of their thoughts on friendship. Bourke's friendship was deeply appreciated by those he called friend. One of them had this to say, "Bourke influenced my life with honesty and compassion. He always gave me more than he took. The friendship we shared and the memories we made will never leave me. Bourke and I shared a friendship that many people search for all their lives because his love was given freely. Hopefully, those who were touched by him will pass on his love and caring. In memory of Bourke, I know I will strive to do so."

The committee for the Bourke L. Corcoran Scholarship Fund congratulates the Class of 2000.

Anyone interested in contributing to this worthy scholarship can send their donation to: The Bourke L. Corcoran Scholarship Fund, Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA. 02025.

Last year's recipients were Tara Hettstrom and Justin Golden. Tara is a member of the National Society of Collegiate Scholars at Boston College and Justin is an honors student and a member of the football team at Harvard University.

100 volunteer for Straits Pond clean-up

Cohasset resident Anson Whealler collects litter as part of the Straits Pond Watershed Association spring cleanup.

A tattered undergarment, a gas tank and a baby doll straight from the set of a Bette Davis movie were among the items dredged up at a recent spring clean up staged by the Straits Pond Watershed Association.

More than 100 volunteers from Hull and Cohasset turned up on a recent Saturday morning to fetch and fill hundreds of 55-gallon trash bags. The water level in the pond was dropped, so volunteers could roll up their sleeves and pluck, tug and heave debris from the 200-plus-acre watershed. What did they find?

"Everything, including quite literally the kitchen sink," said Lawry Reid, former college professor, Hull resident and SPWA founder.

Bottles seemed to cap the list of most common articles found in the clean-up. Liquor bottles, and hard ones at that, were by far the biggest litter culprit. Most of the debris came from the roadside as opposed to the pond water, whose quality will be more accurately tested once the North Cohasset sewer project is completed and water quality studies begin.

Hundreds of green plastic bags lined the three-mile perimeter of the pond. Cohasset resident Vincent Dunn led the rowboat water brigade to the island in Straits Pond, where more litter and debris were collected.

Hull and Cohasset DPW trucks banded together to collect the findings.

"The sad part is this isn't unusual," said volunteer Ed Graham, who serves on Cohasset's Conservation Commission. "On a positive note, it's amazing how much can get accomplished on a delightful spring morning when neighbors come together."

After a morning of clean-up, volunteers and their children enjoyed an afternoon barbecue and picnic.

For more information about the SPWA or to volunteer for the fall clean-up, call Lawry Reid, 925-8659 or e-mail him at l.reid@viaspeech.com.

light keepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, in the fall of 1850. Pierson also spoke of the furious storm which toppled the first Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, sending the two young men to their deaths on April 17, 1851 and construction of the second Minot Lighthouse, completed in 1858. "One of the great maritime engineering achievements in modern history...and stands today, almost 140 years later," he said. Pierson also extended thanks to Town Manager Mark Haddad and members of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen for their assistance in making the memorial a reality.

Captain Blaine Horrocks, who served as guest speaker for the Coast Guard, spoke of how, "the Coast Guard's core values...honor, respect and devotion to duty are derived from the real life examples of brave men such as Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson...These men demonstrated a devotion to duty that any man worth his salt would respect...eventually making the ultimate sacrifice, for their country." Horrocks also presented, on behalf of the Department of Transportation, U.S. Coast Guard, a commendation to Herb Jason, for three decades of service in preserving navigation artifacts and the maritime heritage of the United States.

Douglas Bingham, a member of the American Lighthouse Foundation, served as principal speaker for the ceremony, and provided insight into the daily conditions that light keepers Antoine and Wilson faced on first Minot's Ledge in 1851.

"Fresh food was not available, refrigeration did not exist...communication with the mainland was virtually nonexistent, the lighthouse rolled and pitched two feet each way with the motions of the seas...the heat was probably supplied by one small coal burning stove, which also doubled as the cooking stove...on especially stormy nights, sleep was probably a rare commodity." These two men, as did all other light keepers, approached their task with the grim realization that, "you have to go out, you don't have to come back." Bingham praised the two light keepers as, "men of character, true heroes in American history...They kept a good light, they served with pride" under the most adverse of conditions, and, "they died with honor." Bingham urged that the two light keepers never be forgotten and their devotion to duty forever honored.

In addition to the unveiling of the granite monument, which was inscribed on one side, in part, by the words, "they kept a good light" and accompanied by a rendition of the first Minot Lighthouse falling into the sea on the other, Herb Jason also participated in the laying of three wreaths in Cohasset Harbor. He was assisted by several people, including his daughter Heather Dauphinee. The Coast Guard also laid a wreath at the site of the first Minot's Ledge tower, in honor of the light keepers.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, Herb Jason praised, "the sacrifice made by these two young men, lighthouse keepers, who left this spot 149 years ago, never to return, will always be remembered." Jason also extended his thanks to everyone who generously donated their time and money to make the project a reality.

The ceremony was also attended by members of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse Memorial Committee, including Wigmore Pierson and Douglas Bingham; members of the Coast Guard and several local and state officials. Among the officials in attendance were Town Manager Mark Haddad, selectman Merle Brown, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. US Senator Edward Kennedy and US Congressman William Delahunt —who were unable to attend the ceremony — issued written statements to the gathering of more than100 people, praising the dedication of Herb Jason and the courage of keepers Antoine and Wilson.

Jason and light keepers Antoine and Wilson received a Massachusetts Senate resolution from Sen. Hedlund. Jason also received resolutions from Rep. Murray and selectman Brown, on behalf of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, respectively.

Following the ceremony, Millie Lidington, who was born in the Lightkeeper's house just prior to World War I, and whose grandfather and uncle bravely manned the second Minot's Ledge tower for more than 40 years, offered these thoughts, "I think this memorial was a wonderful thing to do. I hope they have some relatives somewhere who realize that finally it was done and they were commemorated and they are remembered because they really were very brave. Finally, they have their resting place."

Town monitors chemical found in drinking water

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The town need not be alarmed at the discovery in its water supply of a chemical known to be a potential carcinogen, a state agency has informed Cohasset's board of health.

Monitoring of high levels of Total Trihalomethane (TTHM) — discovered after a round of water tests conducted on May 3, 2000 — is ongoing and recommended by the state. TTHM is a byproduct of a chlorination process used to clean water in most public systems. Chlorine is essential to killing potentially life-threatening bacteria like e-coli, which could contaminate public water systems.

The state Department of Environmental Protection has assured Cohasset that one random test in no way indicates a problem, nor does it constitute a violation of health regulations, or present a public health emergency.

"The situation in Cohasset is not that unusual," said Dr. Michael Hutcheson, DEP's head of air and water toxics at the Office of Research and Standards. "Most of the tests conducted in Cohasset were performed at the endpoints of the water system where water is not circulating freely. At endpoints, more sediment is likely to gather than at points from which people draw their drinking water. These

Policy floated to control legal fees

Starting July 1, paying lawyers to handle Cohasset's myriad litigation matters could get a little tougher.

In an effort to rein in the soaring costs that have depleted the town's legal budget, selectmen will consider adopting a more clearly defined policy regarding use of town counsel.

"That's because the litigation budget has run out of money," Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan said.

Town Accountant Michael Buckley said the town initially appropriated $125,000 in its legal budget for fiscal year 2000, which ends June 30. The fall special town meeting added $40,000 and there was a $10,000 transfer into the account making the total $175,000.

"In some cases you have to go to the mat. But if it's feasible, it makes more sense to sit down and try to resolve matters."
— Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan

Callahan said the town has budgeted only $125,000 for Fiscal Year 2001, which starts July 1, and of that $48,000 is the retainer paid to town counsel. The retainer covers everything that is non-litigation or non-labor related such as review of the town warrant, counsel's opinion on issues and his attendance at town meeting.

Remembering the 'Forgotten War'

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Bright sunshine invited thousands of residents to line the streets of Cohasset for Monday's Memorial Day parade, to honor those who have died defending the country's freedom.

The parade, which included the laying of a wreath at POW/MIA Square by former prisoner of war Fred Piepenbrink, and a prayer and 12-gun salute at the World War I Memorial, finished at Veterans Memorial Park, where King Street resident Glenn Pratt paid special tribute to the Korean War, "the Forgotten War," on the conflict's 50th anniversary.

"One and a half-million Americans would serve in Korea. US troop strength reached 348,000 at the height of the war. Other UN nations only sent 40,000 troops. 54,268 Americans would die...This was an American War."
— Glenn Pratt, keynote speaker at Cohasset's Memorial Day Parade

"History has shown that some efforts have been more successful. History has shown that some efforts have been more popular. History has shown that some efforts have made our veterans heroes. History has shown that some efforts have divided the country," said Pratt, adding, "History has shown some efforts have been forgotten."

Pratt, who served as a lieutenant in the Coast Guard from 1966-1972, dismissed the notion that the Korean War wasn't a true

Plan addresses space crunch at town cemeteries

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The town's long-time cemetery space crunch could be over.

Plans to expand Woodside Cemetery to accommodate 600 new graves on two acres will go before the board of health at 7:15 p.m. Monday. But Glenn Pratt, who is leading the charge to find new cemetery space in town, says he thinks the plan will get the go-ahead.

"State law says the board of health must give its approval," he said. "But I think we're in good shape with the board of health."

In fact Monday's hearing is just a formality, health board chairman Steve Bobo said. Pratt appeared before the health board last month but the hearing wasn't properly advertised necessitating a repeat appearance Monday.

"It will get approved," Bobo said. "We like the plan. There is no health threat at all."

The plan involves installing the graves on two acres that would be accessed through a new roadway from the existing Woodside Cemetery off North Main Street. The road, which has conservation commission approval, would traverse a wetlands area, so some land at the site would be used to replicate the filled-in wetlands.

Vaults for the graves would be installed during construction. Vaults are placed four feet down and covered by about six inches of topsoil.

"We like the plan. There is no health threat at all."
— Steve Bobo, board of health

Installing the vaults when the cemetery is built would help the town recoup the cost of the project, Pratt said.

He explained that currently graves in town sell for about $725 without the vault that is installed by a private company at the time of burial. With pre-installed vaults, Pratt said he would be able to make the case to increase the price of graves.

The cemetery expansion project is estimated to cost up to $600,000. Most of that could be paid back through the sale of graves and the debt service wouldn't affect the operating budget, Pratt said. The cemetery expansion will also

Gas work slated

Boston Gas will be upgrading the distribution system on Norfolk Road, No. 20-26. This work began May 29 and lasts approximately two weeks.

The crew will work Monday through Friday from approximately 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The work will be performed by Boston Gas crews and/or a qualified contractor.

The road will be open to the public and parking may be limited. A construction foreman will be on site to address your parking needs throughout the duration of the construction.

Boston Gas will provide a police detail if necessary.

There may be a lag between temporary and permanent restoration of the street and sidewalk, depending on the weather and ground conditions.

This work may require some excavation in the area of the foundation of your home and/or business. The construction foreman on site will notify customers of interruption of gas service and make proper arrangements.

If you have any questions about the project, call John Atkinson, construction supervisor at (617) 723-5512, Ext. 4296, or Lynne Holton, community relations coordinator, Ext. 4526.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, June 6.

No more brush

Brush is no longer being accepted at the RTF. Grass clippings and leaves may be placed in the compost pile, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said.

Fate of Hagerty Property could be decided Tuesday

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

After a seven-year battle, selectmen could be on the verge of finalizing plans for the town-owned Hagerty property, which was the former home to the Cohasset Colonial furniture kit manufacturing company.

However, those plans are unlikely to include the Cohasset Lobster Pound, which may soon become homeless. The Lobster Pound currently sits at the Mill River Marine Railway site, which was recently sold to Peter Roy of Margin Street. The lobster business, which must vacate the property, recently submitted a plan to the selectmen to move onto the Hagerty site..

Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti is against the proposal and said at a committee meeting at the Hagerty property Tuesday night that "the property was bought for the purpose of curbing any future commercial use."

At the meeting, which also was attended by selectmen Fred Koed, Tom Callahan and Merle Brown and local residents, Bonetti presented his committee's plans for turning the two-acre waterfront property into a municipal parking lot and small park. He said the plan had finally received approval after years of haggling with the Army Corps of Engineers on how to build around the wetlands which borders the property.

According to Bonetti, the concrete slab currently at the site, will be removed allowing for the creation of a total of 28 spaces; a gain of nine spaces from the current configuration. He said the expanded parking lot will cut down on the use of narrow Parker Avenue. People who currently use the town's boat ramp at the end of the street have to make an additional trip back up the street just to park, after launching their boats due to a lack of spaces. Bonetti said with more spaces available, this middle trip will be cut out. Bonetti also said the plan takes into consideration the possibility of expansion by the non-profit Lobster Lab, which leases the former Cohasset Colonial offices also located on the Hagerty property

The plans also call for a wooden bridge to be built between the town lot at Government Island and the boathouse leased by the non-profit Cohasset Maritime Institute, and from the boathouse to the Hagerty site.

"The bridge will give access from Government Island to the water," said Bonetti. "Currently people have to hike through the muck or walk all the way around."

The Army Corps had originally expressed concern that the bridge from the boathouse would cause too much of a shadow on the wetlands beneath and wanted a four-and-a-half foot-wide bridge, but Bonetti said the committee and Army Corps agreed on six feet.

The driveway off Parker Avenue, giving access to the boathouse, will be replaced with a grass strip in order to "lessen the impact on the neighbors" said Bonetti. Access to the boathouse will be via a small driveway along the edge of the wetlands, where the concrete slab now is. Though some people wanted extra green space to be added to the water's edge of the parking lot, Bonetti said bringing an amended version of the plans to the Army Corps, would "be like starting all over again."

Lobster Pound owners Tommy Alioto and Dino DiNatale also brought a sketch on what their proposed building would look like. Plans call for a one-story building to sit on the existing 36-foot by 52-foot concrete slab, with two dormers on the front. Alioto has said that he would be willing to pay rent for the site. A parking lot would be developed on the rest of the property, but the parking lot would be just 17 spaces, because the business would require two spaces for its own use.

But to some residents, neither plan is preferred. David Coletta, a Parker Street resident, said he would much rather see the property take advantage of its beautiful location and create a park. He was also very adamant that the property is not developed for commercial use. "I think the selectmen should step up and say no," he said afterwards.

Alioto had said earlier in the meeting that lobstermen currently have to drive to his present location on Border Street and that relocating to a non-waterfront location would not be a business-killer.

"If location doesn't make a difference than it's just a matter of convenience," Coletta said, adding that he thinks the Lobster Pound should move on to Route 3A.

Both selectmen Koed and Callahan said the property's future will be brought up at the next meeting on Tuesday. But although both Koed and Callahan voted to "at least hear what they had to say," the general feeling was that the Lobster Pound's proposal won't pass.

"The Hagerty plan just got approved after seven years, so I can understand their frustration," said Koed who added that he does see the importance of the own helping the Lobster Pound find a new location for their business.

Callahan said that the town should not have to solve private business problems. He also said that he doesn't see much chance in the proposal because "it's very late in the game."

Future use of town-owned gravel pits is unclear

Activity in pits to cease with completion of sewer work

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The good news for North Main Street residents is that Town Manager Mark Haddad has instructed the sewer contractor to discontinue use of the gravel pits located off the street. The bad news is that the future use of that site remains undetermined.

In a letter responding to inquiries made by a North Main Street resident, Haddad said that he has "instructed the engineer and contractor to discontinue use of the area after July 31, 2000." The pit had currently been used to store earth from the town's sewer installation project. With the project reaching the finish line, Haddad said North Main street residents "should no longer be disturbed by the type of operation that has been occurring there over the last year."

Selectman Merle Brown said he expects the future of the pits to be included on a selectman's meeting agenda sometime this fall. Some possible uses for the site include additional Little League fields, soccer fields, senior housing, a police station or a replaced wetland.

The future of the gravel pits off North Main Street is in limbo. Possibilities being floated by town officials include the senior housing and a new police station.

Brown said he personally would like to see a new police station built on the site, with an access road out to North Main street, near Red Gate Lane. But he said that the future of the site will not be finalized until after the MBTA decides the future of the Greenbush Line.

"The train wants to use it as a replicated wetland, and if the state really wants to take it they can.," he said.

But he would rather prefer the property remained town-owned. "We could use it for our own uses," he said adding that there will be a a large amount of fill coming from the renovation of the high school. "We could put it in there, because it costs an awful lot to have someone take it away.

Anne Marie Whilton, whose house borders the pits, said that whatever is done there she just wants something quiet. "It's just been so noisy the past two years...I had a playgroup outside [yesterday] and we couldn't hear each other talk with all the banging." Whilton said she actually would prefer the restoration of wetlands, but wouldn't mind seeing a police station or elderly housing.

"It's just been so noisy the past two years...I had a playgroup outside [yesterday] and we couldn't hear each other talk with all the banging."

— Anne Marie Whilton, abutter

Residents also said that local youth have been visiting the pits with increasing frequency and reported a couple of fires being set. Cohasset police said that although they have received a few calls about kids in the pits, the problem is not overwhelming.

The pits were originally dug at the turn of the century and used for gravel on the town's streets. It has since been used as a storage area for the Cohasset DPW.

WELCOME TO THE WORLD!

Congratulations are in order this week for many families! Let's start this column by welcoming a new Cohasseter to our town! Owen Craig Bleicken arrived on May 6 at 12:01 in the morning. Owen tipped the scales at 9 lb.2 oz. and was 22 in. long. Owen is the son of proud parents, Craig and Leesa Bleicken and joins his big sister, Alexa. We all look forward to seeing Owen around town! Congratulations!

COLLEGE GRADS

We have many wonderful graduates to talk about this week! As a town, we should all be very proud of our children, from pre-school-through-college, they all are amazing. We have two graduates from Bryant College in Smithfield, Rhode Island, which held commencement on Saturday, May 20. They are: Erin E. Devine, who graduated cum laude with a BS in accounting and Christine M. Burns who graduated with a BS in marketing. Congratulations Ladies, we are all proud of these accomplishments.

Another young lady from Cohasset to report on is Elizabeth Pierson who is attending Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, New York. Elizabeth is a member of the Vassar College women's lacrosse team, which finished the year with a 5-9 record and a fourth place finish in the Seven Sisters Championship Tournament. Great Job Elizabeth!

PLEASE HELP

Just a note about a very important day being held here in town. On Wed. June 14, the Red Cross will be at the St. Anthony's Parish Hall in the afternoon and evening for blood donations. Please call Bill Adams (383-0257) to make an appointment to donate blood. Every drop is valued!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

We have some wonderful happy birthdays to report, as well as an apology from last week's column. Nicole Robbins turned seven on her special day, not six as was reported! Sorry Nicole, we hope you had a wonderful day. Happy Birthday to a very special and wonderful woman, Elinor Kennedy on June 7. Elinor turns 98 years old and is truly an inspiration to us all!

SPECIAL LADY

I also received a very special letter about a woman in town who is here in her 94th year. Here is the letter that was given in tribute to Emma Carey from Virginia Anderson and the Cohasset Elder Affairs. "The Cohassset Elder Affairs every year pays tribute to our many residents of Cohasset who are in their nineties. I would like to especially acknowledge a very inspirational and amazing 'young' Ninety Four Years lady. Emma Carey has been for over 40years, and still is, a volunteer at the South Shore Hospital.

"I call her 'Speedy Gonsales!' she can out walk me any day! In the past, she was very active in Girl Scouts.

The girls loved her so much, she formed the first 'Senior girl Scouts' In Cohasset. She is a very remarkable lady and I am very proud to be her friend. Those of us who know her love her very much!" Hats off to a remarkable woman!

LOTS OF ROSANO NEWS

It's a busy time for the Rosano Family this year. Mario and Gina Rosano would like to announce the graduation of their oldest daughter, Laura Rosano from Curry College on May 14, and their niece, Gina Rosano from Babson College on May 20. She was also elected to the Boston College chapter of Phi Beta Kappa and was one of only 72 students to receive that honor, only 5 percent of her class accomplished this. Members are selected by the faculty on the basis of students' academic excellence, breath and depth of academic program and moral character. Fantastic news Megan!

MEMORIAL DAY PARADE

Another wonderful Memorial Day parade was enjoyed by many this past Monday. What a great way for us all to remember and honor the men who served and fought for our country. Congratulations to all who were in the parade and great job to all who were behind the scenes putting it all into action. Every year, the parade and activities surrounding this day lets you know how great it can be to belong to such a wonderful town, bringing together family and friends to honor some pretty amazing people.

The news has been pouring in from all over! Thank you to everyone for all the kind words and welcome to this column! I look forward to hearing and reporting on all your news, both big and small! Relay for life celebrates hope of conquering cancer

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset, set to begin at 3p.m. Friday, June 9, through noon Saturday, June 10, at Cohasset High School is more than just a fund-raiser to support the fight against cancer. It's also a celebration of the fact that hundreds of local residents have survived cancer, and a fun way for Cohasset area residents to take up the fight.

According to Craig Bleicken, event chairman, the American Cancer Society hopes to raise $90,000 during the Relay.

"Approximately 30 teams of walkers from local businesses, families, and community organizations have signed up," he said. "Each team will keep at least one team member on the track throughout the day and night. Walkers collect sponsorship money from friends, family members, and co-workers, which supports the American Cancer Society's programs of research and local services."

In order for each team to keep a representative on the track throughout the 21 hours, team members camp out in tents around the track throughout the night.

Among the more than 700 participants expected are approximately 90 cancer survivors, according to Bleicken. Cancer survivors will be honored at a special reception during the relay at 5 p.m. followed by their own "Survivors' Lap" around the track at 6 p.m.

In addition, a special Luminaria (candlelight) ceremony will be held at 9 p.m. Candles are placed in luminaria bags bearing the names of those that have cancer or the names of those we have lost. When lit, thousands of luminarias create an impressive symbol of hope and a heartfelt reminder of how cancer touches us all. Luminaria bags can be purchased, for a minimum donation of $5, until 8 p.m. Friday, June 9, at the relay.

Corporate sponsors for the event include the Red Parrot Restaurant, the Red Lion Inn, Atlantica, Cohasset Rotary Club and Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. "The relay is such a great way to renew our hope in the fight against cancer, while also doing something practical to support the American Cancer Society," Bleicken said.

Funds raised during the relay will support American Cancer Society cancer control programs, including a research initiative that has supported 30 Nobel Prize winners during its history. The American Cancer Society is also a source for comprehensive information about cancer through its web site, www.cancer.org and its 1-(800) ACS-2345 number, which connects callers to services offered to local patients and those who love them. The information line operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week in English and Spanish.

Further information about the Relay For Life is available by calling the American Cancer Society at (781) 741-9844.

The Cohasset Mariner is proud to be the media sponsor for the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A grave situation

Thanks to persistence, largely from Glenn Pratt who has served on the cemetery committee for the better part of 15 years, the town's grave shortage may be over.

Mr. Pratt is making the rounds of the town boards seeking permits and approvals for an expansion of Woodside Cemetery, which coupled with the new gravesites at Beechwood, will solve the space crunch for 20 years or more.

Graves are something none of us like to think about. Before the town grew short of cemetery space, families planned ahead and often bought plots big enough to include several family members. Until recently in Cohasset, that was no longer possible. As Mr. Pratt said, without a body — you couldn't buy a grave in town.

Although cemeteries are peaceful places, neighborhoods aren't crazy about having them constructed in their backyards. That's essentially why two previous engineered plans failed to pass muster and sent the cemetery committee back to the drawing board. The process has taken years.

The Woodside expansion will include many plantings, a wall of columbaria and a mix of monuments and grave markers so it won't look stark.

Mr. Pratt hopes with selectmen's blessing to take the project to the fall special town meeting where the project deserves the town's support.

Tree & park

Cohasset looked great on Memorial Day. Part of that is due to the natural beauty of the place and the fact that the residents and garden clubs in town all take extra care to ensure lawns are trimmed and flowers planted.

But the town's Tree & Park Department also deserves recognition. We saw them working hard on the town common and Veteran's Memorial Park, as well as the town cemeteries getting them spruced up for the holiday. They don't stop there, Cohasset's parks and public areas look magnificent all season long. Our thanks go to DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield and Tree & Park department superintendent Peter Laugelle — and all your hard workers — for making the town sparkle.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lobster pound

TO THE SELECTMEN:

This is a follow-up to my May 15, 2000 letter to you regarding the proposed lobster pound at the Hagerty property. Even after listening to the May 23 selectmen's meeting on the subject, I am still strongly opposed to a lobster pound at this location. The property was not purchased for commercial use, and commercial use should not be considered now. The property should be developed as parking and green space for harbor access as originally intended.

The zoning for the property should have been changed when the town bought the property. The zoning should be changed to open space to avoid this issue in the future. The current zoning is merely a hold over from when the Hagerty business was there.

As proposed last night, the lobsters would still unload at the town dock, then be trucked over to the pound at the end of Parker Avenue. Remember, Parker Avenue is a narrow, congested residential street complete with young children and pets. If they are going to drive, why not drive to Cohasset's commercial zone on 3A? This would be a more appropriate location for a commercial endeavor, and also be a better location to ship an estimated 350,000 pounds of lobster from — that's a lot of shipping and truck traffic for Parker Avenue.

In closing, I would just like to reiterate that a commercial enterprise does not belong on town property, especially property which was purchased to rid the site of commercial use in favor of waterfront access for the whole town to enjoy.

Ann Fogarty
Parker Avenue

Dangerous light

MR. RICK YOCUM
SAFETY OFFICER

Regarding the Mariner article of May 18 about accidents at Beechwood and 3A. The intersection is extremely dangerous as you point out, and needs to be immediately redesigned. When turning onto Beechwood from 3A one cannot see the inside lane when a car or truck, headed at us, is also turning. As a resident of the area I have had two near misses in nine months — and the fault was mine, in not being extremely cautious. For someone not familiar with the problem, it can be deadly.

There will be deaths, unless the problem is solved. How do we make it happen?

Hagerty parking

DEAR BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

I would like to express my concern and dismay at the actions of the Board at it's meeting of May 23.

The Hagerty Committee has devoted literally, hundreds of hours of time on this project. During the course of the last seven years we have submitted various plans for the use of the property. The Selectmen based on the amount of parking that was proposed rejected many of those plans. The most recent plan, which received final Army Corps approval just this week was approved by the Selectmen last fall. For the Board to now consider a proposal that would drastically reduce the amount of parking at this stage is an insult to the efforts of everyone who has been involved in this project. The fact that this proposal is for a commercial use shows either a lack of a firm grasp on what has been going on, or callous disregard for the efforts that have been made by this committee as well as the Board of Selectmen.

The purpose of the purchase of this property was to increase access to the harbor and to remove commercial influence from the harbor. For the Board to consider moving the lobster pound to the Hagerty property runs contrary to these uses. Parking would be reduced by over 25 percent by locating the pound to this location.

The Town currently has two buildings on this property that are in deplorable shape as it is now, to try to take on yet another is an idea that is ludicrous.

I have posted a meeting of the Hagerty Committee for 6:30, May 30 at the Hagerty property. I am inviting the representatives of the lobster pound to attend and would like to extend the same to all of the Selectmen so that the full impact of this proposal can be seen.

Russell Bonetti
Chairman, Hagerty Property Committee

Editor's note: Mr. Bonetti provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter for publication.

TO THE EDITOR

Hooray for Hingham! Now, what about Cohasset, Scituate, etc.? If it can be done in Hingham, surely an underground tunnel is possible in other towns too!

Opponents have been losing steam (or moving out-of-town)...perhaps this is what the T officials were hoping for...Why disrupt the charm of Cohasset village, the serenity of Scituate harbor? I'm hopeful, perhaps unrealistically, that Hingham has provided the impetus for other Greenbush towns to mitigate/fight for tunnels throughout the Greenbush line. Otherwise "reality" will strike: with the deafening whistles blowing; the rumble of traffic and trains; the lack of safe crossings; the environmental impacts; the actual truth that the time is now (or never) to fight the final battle to retain the beauty/safety/quality of the south shore! Sounds dramatic? Definitely...Is it a "done deal"? Probably...Do we still have time? Hopefully. Is anyone listening? Sen. Hedlund? Rep. Murray? Selectmen? The tunnels throughout the line — it can be done! Let's try and try harder now!

Rusty Skippers

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Rusty Skippers Marching Band, thank you for the wonderful story and picture in last week's Mariner. We were proud to participate in the remembrances of Memorial Day.

We always welcome new members to the band. Even if you have not played in 20 years or more, please come to a rehearsal and see for yourself how much fun we have making music together. You'll probably surprise yourself at how your fingers and mouth remember what to do! Our next rehearsal is Tuesday, June 6th, at 7pm, at Deer Hill School. We will be performing at The Relay for Life, Saturday, June 10 at 10:30, and at the South Shore Festival on the Common, Sunday, June 18 at 1pm. These two performances will feature music we purchased with the donation from the Harborfest Committee.

Special thanks to our loyal director, Steve Biagini. Any questions, please call Melinda Murray 383-7017 or me 383-9444.

COHASSET CARES

'Permanent garbage'

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

There's the astronomical Star Wars program, costing an amount so mind-boggling it is hopelessly beyond my ken. But then there's Styrofoam (I hate to dignify it with a capital, but that's the way it was treated in the book I'm reviewing). Have you used any lately? Every day, most likely.

Recently a little book entitled "50 Simple Things Kids Can Do To Save The Earth" surfaced at our Voluntary Simplicity meeting. (Did you see the many illuminating articles on Voluntary Simplicity in the Business section of the May 7 Boston Sunday Globe?) The book had been obtained, of all places, at the Cohasset RTF (Recycling Transfer Facility, that is), for free, in the 'boutique.' (Have you ever seen the boutique at the Nantucket Recycling Center? It's a separate, large, and attractive building near the entrance, open and inviting, always popular. Whatever your views on Nantucket, the need to recycle is in the air when you live on an island. The smaller the island, the greater the need to recycle. I don't feel quite the urgency on Martha's Vineyard, but we have friends who have a seven-acre island off Maine, and you'd better believe that appreciation/care-taking for everything there is 100-percent greater than on the mainland. Living on a small island is quite an experience.)

The table of contents of the 50 Simple Things book starts out with "A note to kids"; then "To parents and teachers"; then, the first major section, "What's happening," including such units as "Air pollution," "Disappearing animals," "Too much garbage" (where the book introduces the term "precycle, which means not buying things that can't be re-used, like plastic wrapping and other packaging"), "Water pollution," and so on.

The book's second major section is called "Guarding our buried treasures." I was drawn to the unit entitled "Stamp out Styrofoam." What I learned in those few pages staggered me. I literally had to put the book down for a while before getting back to it. Those few pages are the inspiration — read, incendiary fuel — for this week's column. Here is the bulk of the Styrofoam unit:

Take a guess. If you lined up all the Styrofoam cups made in just one day (underlining mine), how far would they reach? A) A mile B) Around the earth C) Across the U.S. Answer: B. Incredible! They would circle the entire planet...and reach a little further, too!

You may not know the word "Styrofoam," but you know the stuff. It's a kind of material we use for things like throwaway cups, packing things in boxes, and for keeping 'food to go' warm. Lots of hospitals and schools serve their meals using Styrofoam (and plastic forks, knives, and spoons) trays, plates, bowls and cups.

Styrofoam is a kind of plastic, so making it uses up treasures that have been on the Earth for billions of years.

And what do we do with it? Go take a look in a garbage container. Does that styrotrash look like the Earth's treasures to you? Not anymore!

Using Styrofoam means using up precious resources. . . and adding more garbage to our world. Is that what you want? Or do you — and your planet — deserve something better?

Did You Know — Styrofoam is permanent garbage (italics mine). It can't ever become part of the Earth again. Five hundred years from now a child might be digging in the backyard and find a piece of the Styrofoam cup you drank lemonade from on a picnic last week!

— Styrofoam is a danger to sea animals. Floating in the water, it looks like their food. But when they eat it, they're in trouble. Sea turtles, for example, sometimes eat Styrofoam and then — because it makes them float — can't dive again. It eventually clogs their systems, and then they starve to death.

What You Can Do — Avoid Styrofoam. Such plastic foam is often made with chemicals that make the ozone hole bigger!

— If you eat at fast-food restaurants, ask for paper cups and plates. If the people at the restaurant say they don't have them, explain why you don't want to use Styrofoam. Tell them that, as much as you like their food, you really don't want to do anything to hurt the Earth.

— Try to avoid Styrofoam products like picnic plates, cups, and egg cartons.

'50 Simple Things Kids Can Do To Save The Earth' is written by The Earth Works Group and is published by Andrews and McMeel.

A little poster I observed downtown in Scituate in a shop window was done by Christine Collins, age 6. It said, 'Take care of my Earth. I will need it when I grow up.'

See you next time.

New York senate race

Quick now.

Who is running for president?

Ah . . . uh . . . er . . . Don't tell me now. It's on the tip of my tongue. Oh, dammit! A month or so ago I could have told you without looking it up. Alright, I give up.

(It's Al Bush and George Gore. Or maybe it's the other way around. I don't remember.)

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

But ask me who's running for the Senate from the state of New York and I can give you a detailed account of the race, right down to the disclosure that Hillary failed to tip the waitress after eating a free breakfast in that diner in Albion, N. Y.

In fact, I know so much more about Hillary and Rudy (or Rick or Bill or whoever the Republicans can dig up) than I do about Al and George that I'm tempted to move to New York so that I can cast a truly knowledgeable vote.

If that makes me a carpetbagger, so be it.

The state of New York seems to have the welcome mat out for carpetbaggers. As a resident of New York in 1964 I was one of the rare voters who cast my ballot for all three Kennedy brothers for the Senate, Jack in 1952, Bobby in 1964 and Ted thereafter.

I remember the '64 election in which the incumbent senator, known even then as "poor" Ken Keating, went down in flames while castigating Bobby as a carpetbagger from Massachusetts. I don't know if he realized that perhaps half the New York population came from somewhere else, too.

In fact, I know so much more about Hillary and Rudy (or Rick or Bill or whoever the Republicans can dig up) than I do about Al and George that I'm tempted to move to New York so that I can cast a truly knowledgeable vote.

Apparently, carpetbagger doesn't mean anything anymore.

The logical successor to the retiring Rudy Giuliano as the Republican candidate against Hillary is Cong. Rick Lazio, born and raised on Long Island, but another carpetbagger from Massachusetts, Bill Weld, has been mentioned for the spot on the ballot.

Bill, of course, when he wasn't off shooting boar in New Hampshire or vacationing in the Adirondacks or on a trade mission to Europe, was the governor of the Bay State until he got tired of it and turned his office and squash racket over to Paul Cellucci.

Actually, Bill was more of a carpetbagger in Boston than he would be in New York since, like Rick Lazio, he was born on Long Island and retired from the State House to practice law in Manhattan, putting a whole state between him and the Big Dig.

Incidentally, Massachusetts may get a carpetbagger of its very own in the 2000 senatorial race if Jack E. Robinson can get the Republican ballot slot to run against Ted Kennedy. He was born in Massachusettts but made his pile in Connecticut.

You might even call our other senator, John Kerry, a carpetbagger because he was born in Denver, Colo. But, like I say, carpetbagger doesn't seem to have the bite that it had when Bobby Kennedy unpacked in New York, where he planned to stay at least until an apartment at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. opened up.

Can it be that Hillary . . . oh, no . . .

Fifteen out of 23 members of Congress from Florida were born outside the state, including two from Havana, Cuba, four from New York, one from Waterbury, Conn., and Rep. Mark Foley of the 16th District who originated in Newton, Mass.

Twenty-four of the 52 U. S. representatives from California also got their starts in life outside its bounds, including one from Budapest, Hungary. California's Sen. Barbara Boxer was born 'neath the palm trees in Brooklyn.

And you thought Hillary and Bill Weld and Jack E. Robinson were the only carpetbaggers.

HEALTH NOTES

West Nile Virus alert

In 1999 an outbreak of West Nile Virus (WNV) infections occurred in the Northeastern United States, such infections had never previously been reported in the United States. While the virus was not detected in Massachusetts, WNV was detected in horses and humans in New York and in birds in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Maryland. It is possible that the virus may spread to Massachusetts.

West Nile Virus causes encephalitis, which can be very severe and even fatal. The disease is spread by mosquitoes with birds generally acting as reservoirs. One of the signs of WNV activity may be an increased number of dead birds, especially crows, in a given area. While there is no evidence that handling live or dead infected birds could cause the spread of the disease, it is best to wear rubber gloves or double plastic bags if handling a dead bird. Under certain circumstances the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (MDPH) will be testing birds. Call the board of health at 383-4116 or the Epidemiology Program of the MDPH at (617) 983-6800, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday or (617) 522-3700 after hours and on weekends, and ask to speak to the epidemiologist on call.

To help prevent the spread of mosquitoes, which can carry WNV, everyone can help eliminate their breeding sites. Around the home, the species of mosquitoes spreading WNV breeds in stagnant water containers, gutters, discarded tires, trash cans and untreated swimming pools and wading pools. Make sure you empty containers such as buckets or other things that can hold water, and keep your gutters cleaned. The mosquito thrives in water drainage systems. So if you have a catch basin and or a storm drain, which can hold water for four days or more, let the board of health know about it so we can plan appropriate action in the event WNV is isolated in this part of Massachusetts.

Members needed for mosquito control committee

The mosquito control committee, generally, was formed for the following purposes:

Develop and help implement a plan for vector control (insects and animals that carry infectious disease).

Monitor mosquitoes that carry infectious diseases.

Control mosquito breeding areas.

Work with town officials and the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Program to develop the above issues.

Distribute information to residents on prevention measures that can be taken to eliminate unnecessary exposure to mosquitoes and chemicals used to eradicate them.

Work to archive an Integrated Pest Management program for the control of disease vectors.

Act as a liaison between residents and the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Program.

Anyone interested in learning more about the mosquito control committee or becoming a member should call the board of health at 383-4116.

LIBRARY CORNER

Summer Tuesdays

The following is a list of summer programs for children ages 3-10 sponsored by the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library beginning on Tuesday evenings at 7 p.m. June 20 with Sparky's Puppets. Sparky Davis, of Rhode Island, has performed in schools, libraries, and festivals throughout New England for more than 20 years. Her handmade puppets dramatize favorite children's stories with lively humor and plenty of audience participation. The new program — "Gotcha!" that she will perform at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library was created especially for the statewide summer reading program theme, "Open Books, Open Frontiers." In each story of this collection of folktales, a clever character solves a problem by using nimble thinking or a crafty trick. Watch how a hardworking gardener outwits a pesky goblin. Meet a wise woman, a clever toy maker and Anansi the Spider, a trickster from West Africa.

Elisa Pearmain performs at the library July 11. Pearmain is a professional storyteller with 15 years of experience delighting audiences; from the National Storytelling Festival and First Night Boston to hundreds of schools and libraries throughout New England. Pearmain trains teachers to use storytelling in the classroom through Leslie College, Cambridge. Her program "Imagination, the First Frontier" has also been customized to fit this year's program theme. Her folktales, which creatively explore how things came to be, will help children understand and use their own imaginations.

The Magic Door performance comes to the library Aug. 1. Bass-baritone John Davies is a professional singer who has performed with opera companies throughout the United States, including the Metropolitan Opera Company and opera companies in Boston, Philadelphia, and San Francisco. He also writes and produces educational programs and operas for young audiences that have been performed by more than 25 orchestras and children's museums. "The Magic Door" is an interactive presentation of a variety of lighthearted and entertaining characters who sing of their triumphs and troubles pretending to be someone else.

For more information, call children's librarian Suzanne Terry at 383-1348.

Thanks for help

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset Youth Resources Committee would like to extend its most sincere gratitude to George E Haley for volunteering his time and materials to paint the five posts in front of the Teen Garage.

It is especially because of residents such as Mr. Haley that Cohasset remains the very fine community in which we live and work.

Smarten up

TO THE EDITOR:

This is an open letter to all the taxpayers of the town.

I know I am just an ignorant fisherman, but if you speak slowly and clearly, I sometimes understand what is being said. Would you explain to me again why it is alright for a businessman to have an office in the remaining Hagerty building at the price of $1 per year, and it is not alright for another businessman to rent some of the property for $18,000 per year?

The proposal to put the Cohasset Lobster Pound on the Hagerty property was not instigated by the owner of the pound or by any fisherman because we knew it would be turned down. A concerned citizen started it after she heard of the plight of the Cohasset lobstermen having to drive miles to sell their catch. It just seemed sensible to her.

The idea of a lobster lab should also be turned down — why doesn't anyone call this concept what it is? It is a plan for a private individual to have an office with a harbor view while paying little or no rent. There is not one fisherman in Cohasset, maybe even in the state of Massachusetts, in favor of putting this lab in this location. They are openly laughing at you for being taken in. Smarten up before it is too late.

I think the idea of research is fine. However, the water in Cohasset Harbor is not clean enough for scientific research on lobsters. Any studying will have to be done using a closed, refrigerated circulating water system. A system such as this may be put anywhere. Why not put the lab in a school building where the students are easily able to control the environment and access the project?

Town meeting mandated that all the buildings be torn down and a parking lot (which we desperately need) at the harbor be established. Do your job; stop beating around the bush.

I understand close to $100,000 has been spent so far to demolish some of the buildings and support the engineering and permit fees. This is a travesty. All we wanted was to bulldoze the land flat, put a few loads of crushed-run on top and use it to park cars with trailers. Within that space, we wanted to configure a large circular turn-around area so that a truck and trailer with a 45- or 50-foot boat could turn. As it is now, a truck hauling a boat has to back the length of Parker Avenue to get to the water. This is yet another case where bureaucracy has ruined a simple project.

Food pantry support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Food Pantry wishes to express its gratitude to the Cohasset Post Office and all its carriers for their recent Postal Food Drive benefiting our Pantry and clients.

We received over 4000 pounds of non-perishable foods thanks to the generosity of the households of Cohasset who donated food and household goods. The quality and quantity of these donations was overwhelming.

We wish to also thank Richard Leach at the Post Office for coordinating this drive along with Postmaster Stephen Cabezas. We also wish to thank the hardworking volunteers who spent many hours moving and sorting the large quantity of food.

Our shelves are now full, and we are deeply grateful to the community for its generosity.

Taxpayers' savings

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-3rd Plymouth District, reports the sales tax regulation on discounts, coupons and rebates has been amended by the Massachusetts Department of Revenue, thereby ending the practice of taxing the value of manufacturers' coupons and rebates applied at the time of sale.

"A $35 million a year savings to consumers is projected," Murray said.

Under the old regulation, the sales tax was applied to the entire price of the item before any manufacturer's coupon or discount was deducted.

This was not the case on prices that were reduced by a store coupon or discount.

Those sales were taxed on the balance after the discount had been applied.

The new regulation will now treat most manufacturers' coupons and rebates the same as store coupons and sale discounts.

Most food and clothing purchases are not subject to the sales tax, and therefore not affected by the change. However, taxable items sold by retailers, including automobiles and appliances will be affected.

"With the summer season fast approaching, this regulatory change could not come at a better time," Murray added. "Manufacturers' rebates on cars are often worth thousands of dollars and the average consumer would benefit from hundreds of dollars in tax savings."

Town monitors chemical found in drinking water

may not be representative samples, and Cohasset needs to resample at more representative points."

TTHM occurs when chlorine in water mixes with organic matter like leaves and vegetation or sediment found in water mains. TTHM is a known carcinogen, and has been linked to miscarriages in a study performed in California, said Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr.

McNabb has discussed the levels with the DEP and the board of health. "We immediately notified the board of health and the DEP of these results," McNabb said.

Currently, federal regulations allow a maximum of 80 parts per billion of TTHM in public water supplies. The May 3 tests revealed an average level of 162 parts per billion in Cohasset?s system. But the official EPA method for measuring TTHM levels involves four tests taken from representative points over a one-year period. The TTHM level is the average of the four measurements taken throughout the year. Because the water commission conducted only one test, and because the samples were taken from endpoints, the results cannot be considered representative of the entire Cohasset water system, Hutcheson said.

"When we see TTHM levels this high, we have to examine whether it is caused by some of the characteristics of the water, or if it's a result of the amount of chlorine being used," Hutcheson said. "We try to balance the use of chlorine with the adverse effects of bacterial contamination. A one-time high TTHM number is not necessarily a health hazard. When we see something like this, we always recommend resampling."

Hutcheson said chlorination is an important method for reducing the risk to humans of bacterial contamination. In Ontario, a broken chlorination pump recently left the city's water system without any protection from bacterial contamination. Five people died from drinking tap water when e-coli-tainted sediment from a local farm leeched into the public water supply. Hutcheson said research has indicated that TTHM is a health problem primarily for people who, during their lifetimes, consume two liters of water per day containing more than 80 parts per billion of TTHM.

McNabb said he requested TTHM testing recently as a safeguard while the water commission flushed the town's water system. "While we are not required to do this testing, we did so because we thought that TTHM levels might be a problem and we wanted to monitor the safety of the water supply," McNabb said. "Resampling will be performed to determine if this is a continuing problem. Regardless of what future sampling shows, we are taking action now to reduce these concentrations as soon as we can."

Tomorrow (Friday) the DEP will send an expert to evaluate the town's water plant and make recommendations for reducing TTHM levels. At the June 8 water commission meeting, Tutela Engineering, the commission's consultant, will make recommendations on ways to reduce TTHM levels through additional system flushing.

"Until we finish the Scituate Hill tank and are then able to clean the Bear Hill tank, we have to avoid flushing the existing six feet of alum sludge out of the Bear Hill tank and into the pipes, which could increase TTHM levels," McNabb said.

The Scituate Hill water tank should be completed and ready for operation by January 2001, McNabb said.

Policy floated to control legal costs in budget

Brooks DeRensis Holland & Drachman, P.C., as town counsel since 1996. The town pays the firm a retainer of about $4,000 a month plus $140 an hour to attorneys for litigation work.

Callahan explained that Cohasset's problem is twofold. The town is generating a lot of litigation and town counsel needs to better control the people working on the various cases to keep costs down.

"On town counsel's side, I think their staff can do a better job than using carte blanche," he said. "And on our side, we can better anticipate litigation issues and try to seek solutions short of litigation — by trying to look at matters in the spirit of compromise."

Selectmen have long had a policy regarding use of town counsel, so much of what they will consider at their next meeting June 6 is already in force.

But what's new are setting a specific budget when litigation comes up and more regular, day-to-day management of what's going on in legal cases.

"We need to talk more frequently about what's going on," Callahan said.

The new policy, if adopted, would set up a "litigation management team" consisting of the town manager, town counsel, selectmen chairman and the head or chairman of the department or board involved in the litigation or grievance matter to seek preemptive solutions to legal matters.

Although for a year the town officials have worked with Cohasset Heights Landfill to seek an end to 10-to-12 years of litigation, CHL issues continue to drive the legal budget, Callahan said. A recent example of a CHL matter that prompted town counsel involvement is CHL's opposition to the approval of a town meeting article amending the zoning by-law effectively prohibiting any landfill from operating along the section of Rte. 3A where CHL is located. CHL wrote to the attorney general's office asking that the zoning change be nullified and town counsel is going to bat for the town.

Expensive litigation this year also included issues relating to Cohasset Harbor Marina and the Nadar case involving a new home off Beechwood Street, Callahan said.

"In some cases you have to go to the mat," Callahan said. "But if it's feasible it makes more sense to sit down and try to resolve matters."

Plan addresses space crunch at Cohasset's cemeteries include 1,000 columbaria, which are vaults with niches for ashes. According to the US Cemetery Association, 60 percent of all burials will be ashes by 2020.

Pratt said he hopes to convince selectmen to put the project on this fall's special town meeting.

"It's not like going out and spending half-million dollars on something that produces no revenue for the town," he said.

And Pratt should know. He's served on the cemetery committee for the better part of 15 years. This is the third plan to be engineered out.

The previous plans, one off Pleasant Street and the other off Red Fox Lane, met with stiff opposition from abutters and were subsequently abandoned.

He said the cemetery committee always knew the Woodside area was available but hoped to construct a new cemetery on a larger parcel that would solve the town's needs for a hundred years or more. However, with the new graves at Beechwood and the proposed expansion at Woodside, the town should have enough grave space for a generation or two, Pratt said.

Pratt said the town averages 50 burials a year including those at the town-owned Woodside and Beechwood cemeteries and the privately owned Cohasset Central Cemetery.

However, due to the shortage of cemetery space, until the recent Beechwood expansion, it had been years since anyone has been able to buy a gravesite ahead of time.

"You couldn't buy a grave unless you had a dead body," he said.

Pratt estimates that with the new cemetery the town could sell 100 graves a year, including urn vaults.

State law requires that towns have municipal cemeteries.

Pratt said he is optimistic that the zoning board that will hear revised plans regarding plantings and landscaping will also back the proposal at the continuation of a hearing next month.

Cemeteries are allowed in residential zones by special permit.

The zoning board had concerns about density and appearance. But Pratt said a botanist has drawn up an extensive plan of plantings. Trees, like red maples, without extensive root systems would be planted. Also, there would be a mix of monuments and flat markers. A wall would also house the urns.

"It won't be stark," he said. Any view from Route 3A would also be heavily screened, he said.

If all goes as planned and the project wins approval of this fall's special town meeting, construction could begin next spring, Pratt said.

Remembering the 'Forgotten War'

American war by saying, "One and a half-million Americans would serve in Korea. US troop strength reached 348,000 at the height of the war. Other UN nations only sent 40,000 troops. 54,268 Americans would die…This was an American War."

President Harry S. Truman committed United States troops to Korea in 1950 as part of a United Nations "police action." Though a cease-fire was declared in 1953, US troops still guard the 38th parallel which divides North and South Korea. Cohasset resident C. David Strout was the only soldier from the town killed in the conflict. According to Pratt, the Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee has not been able to find a relative of Strout's in order to "express to his family [the town's] gratefulness for their son making the supreme sacrifice."

Pratt, who was instrumental in pushing through the creation of the memorial park, said that the closeness to World War II worked against the Korean War in getting its due recognition. "The Korean War was an interruption of the good life Americans were enjoying." He said that the land being fought for was, to Americans, "unknown" and "of little importance" and that after 37 months of combat, veterans returned home to "no parades, no show of pride, no support programs. After all, how could they compare to what the WWII veterans had done?"

Pratt finished his speech by asking for a moment of silence in remembrance of the 21 Cohasset residents killed in action in World Wars I and II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War. No one from Cohasset was killed in 1991's Gulf War. After the laying of a wreath by Gold Star Mother June Simeone and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray at the memorial, the flags, which had been at half-mast, were raised and held straight out by a stiff wind.

More than 50 veterans, many in uniform, some forced to ride in cars, marched in the parade, and were supported by the Rusty Skippers Marching Band, the Deer Hill School band, Boy Scout Troop 28, the Girl Scouts and a police escort.

The notable difference in this year's parade was the large amount of people who turned out for it. Steve Wigmore, commander of Cohasset American Legion Post 118, said it was the biggest turnout "in a number of years."

Murray, who was a corporal in the Marines from 1944-1946 and is a perennial marcher in the parade, called the turnout "terrific" and praised the respect those gathered at Veterans Memorial Park showed during Pratt's speech. "They were all very quiet," she said.

Murray, who is not running for reelection, said after she leaves office, she would like to set up a program in Cohasset where veterans go into the schools and talk to students about their experiences. She said she hopes that the younger generations will acquire a reverent attitude towards the holiday, as her generation did. "This is the only thing I knew," she said about turning out for the ceremonies. "Everyone used to really know what [the day] meant. Now the stores are open and I think that's just awful…It's not just another day off."

Ned Tebbetts, of Jerusalem Road Drive, and a former chairman of the board of selectmen, has been marching in the parade for the past 15 years. A 1943 graduate of Andover Academy, Tebbetts, who served in the Navy during World War II, saw 10 of his 200 classmates die in the war. He applauded the number of families who turned out saying it should be a day for families to "show their appreciation for veterans."

Krupczak wins state 200-meter title

Five Skippers moving on to All-State meet

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The lucky number was 4, as in the top-four finishers in Saturday's State Class meets qualified for this weekend's All-State meet at Norwell High. The Clippers' track, which has been used plenty over the last two weeks with the South Shore Principals and Class D meet, will feature the best tracksters in Massachusetts. And Cohasset will be well represented.

"I couldn't believe it. All the hard work finally paid off."
Brian Krupczak, state Class D 200-meter champion

The Skippers' boys track team, led by Brian Krupczak's inspirational victory in the 200-meter dash, will be represented in the 200, mile and 400 relay. The Skippers had an outstanding meet, finishing ninth overall in the state Class D competition with 21 points.

Tourney teams ready for action

Baseball, girls tennis get started this week

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Tournament time is upon us once again, and Cohasset has two teams ready to do some postseason damage. One of the teams, the girls tennis squad, is a perennial tournament contender and has won the South Shore League title for three years in a row.

Cohasset's other playoff entrant, the baseball team, is somewhat of a surprise, having made the tournament for the first time in four years. Here's a look at each team's chances as the tournaments get underway this week.

BASEBALL

The Cohasset baseball squad has had an outstanding season, finishing with an 11-9 record in the tough South Shore League, which produced five Div. 3 tournament teams.

Out of a field of 24 teams in the Div. 3 South tournament, the Skippers drew the 18th seed and will play at 15th seeded West Bridgewater (12-8) at 2:30 p.m. today (Thursday). If they win they will play Friday at Old Colony at 4 p.m.

The difference in seeding could be made moot by Cohasset's strong starting pitching. Both senior SSL all-star Greg O'Keeffe and sophomore Nick Bolster have thrown no-hitters this season, meaning either is capable of completely shutting down an opponent in the tournament.

Adding to the excellent pitching is Cohasset's outstanding defense. The Skippers are particularly strong up the middle, led by catcher Tim Straughan, second baseman Robin Murphy, shortstop T.J. Bilodeau and center fielder Doug O'Brien.

With Cohasset's strong pitching and defense, the offense will likely only need to generate a few runs to be win a game in the tournament. Led by contact hitters O'Brien and Murphy at the top of the lineup, the offense will need Bolster, first baseman Joe Pergola and Straughan to get timely RBI hits with men on base.

GIRLS TENNIS

The girls tennis team finished up a 9-1 campaign this season and won its third consecutive South Shore League title, but the Skippers did not schedule any of the area's quality non-league opponents, such as Scituate, Hingham, Marshfield or Notre Dame Academy, all of which are state tournament teams.

With a fairly young team this season, including freshman Lindsay Grossman at second singles, coach Gigi Meehan decided against playing a tough schedule.

"We're better than I expected we'd be," Meehan said. "I didn't expect our young players to be as good as they've been."

In the Div. 2 tournament, the Skippers will have to keep an eye on area teams Scituate and Norwell, both of whom have outstanding players.

Norwell, in fact, handed Cohasset its only loss of the season last Tuesday, beating the Skippers in a close, 3-2 match.

The Skippers did beat the Clippers earlier in the season, which could set the stage for an epic rubber match in the tournament should the two face off again.

Senior Kate Stone will lead the way for Cohasset at first singles, bringing her all-court game as well as the experience of having been the Skippers top player for the last four years.

Stone's experience should have a calming effect on freshmen Lindsay Grossman and Julie Shea in their first state tournament.

Cohasset's second and third singles players, Grossman and Shea have stepped right in as freshmen and played very well. Grossman, in particular, has been outstanding, undefeated on the season at 10-0. She has not lost a set all season at second singles.

Cohasset pitcher Greg O'Keeffe hurls in the South Shore League-Patriot League All-Star Game at East Bridgewater Saturday. The South Shore stars won, 8-7.

Abington High's Mike McCleary just wanted to get a piece of the ball.

Before stepping up to the plate in the top of the ninth inning of Saturday's South Shore-Patriot League All-Star game, the Green Wave catcher had popped up to first base and drawn a walk.

"I didn't want to pop up again," he said. "There was a lot of pressure. I was just hoping to get the ball into play. It was fun."

McCleary singled to center, driving in two runs to give the South Shore League an 8-7 win at Strong Field in East Bridgewater.

Cohasset's Doug O' Brien was the sparkplug for the South Shore All-Stars that he has been all season for the Skippers, scoring the team's first run, while pitcher Greg O'Keeffe turned in his usual solid outing, despite throwing every pitch to an all-star.

That someone had to lose wasn't something McCleary or his teammates on the South Shore or Patriot League all-star teams minded. The best players in both leagues had a chance to all be on the same field at the same time.

"Before the game, I noticed them in groups telling stories and talking," said Rockland High coach Rick Fredericks, one of the Patriot League coaches. "They get to know each other."

The players weren't the only ones conversing during the game as the coaches also found time to renew acquaintances.

"You talk to them before games, but you're nervous and you're worried about the game," said

Girls lacrosse wins season finale

Appropriate send-off for graduating seniors

The Cohasset girls' varsity lacrosse team shrugged off a Falmouth comeback and scored three unanswered goals late in the second half to beat their South League rivals, 13-10.

In a contest that marked the final game for the four seniors who'd been mainstays of the program since eighth grade, co-captains Jackie Kahn and Jenny Chastain, defender Emily Libby and defensive wing Caitlin Stansell led the Skippers' final surge.

Libby and Stansell held off the Clippers after Falmouth scored to tie the game at 9-9 with 12 minutes left. Chastain dominated the face-offs, and Kahn scored two of the final four goals.

"I'm so proud of the way the seniors stepped up in their last game," said girls lacrosse coach Kathy Gaudiano. "They all played great, and the contribution they made to this team and this program cannot be underestimated."

Cohasset started very strong, outscoring Falmouth 8-2 in the first half, including a goal with 11 seconds left by freshman attacker Sera Genovese.

Another freshman, goalie Gia Petrakis, racked up her 200th save of the season late in the first half, setting a school girls' lacrosse record for most saves in a season.

Petrakis would finish the game with 16 saves, and 205 for the season.

"At halftime, I think we thought Falmouth would quit," said Gaudiano. "But it was a league fifth in the Class D meet last season, finally had the chance to run in a high-powered 200 under optimal conditions. He took full advantage after winning his qualifying heats by bolting to a commanding victory in 22.4 seconds.

"I couldn't believe it," Krupczak said of the moment after he crossed the finish line. "I couldn't even think. All the hard work finally paid off."

Krupczak would love to move closer to the 22.0 second barrier, which is an extremely impressive time for a high-school sprinter. He hopes the quality of the field at Saturday's All-State meet will push him closer to that goal.

"Honestly, I wasn't pushed as much as I would have liked," he said of his victory on Saturday. "The second guy ran 22.8. With the faster competition, I think I've got a chance run a first time at the all-states."

Krupczak also will not have to balance the demands of the 200 and the long jump, which he was shuttling between on Saturday before deciding to focus solely on the 200.

"I always seem to be caught between jumping and my first couple 200 heats," he said. "I was getting tired, and so I didn't jump as well as I probably could have, but it was worth it to win the 200."

Calling his victory "a dream come true," Krupczak is looking to run a solid race and qualify for the New England championships on June 3 in South Portland, Maine. "Maybe I can get in the top six with my race," Krupczak said.

Krupczak's state title in the 200 was certainly the high point of Cohasset's day on Saturday, but he won't be the only Skipper participating at the prestigious All-State meet.

Cohasset High miler Tim Baird was very much in contention throughout the entire Class D race. Baird didn't have quite enough at the end, but never faltered, crossing the line in 4:38.9 for third place.

Still, any spot in the top four was good enough to qualify for the All-State meet, and Baird has a chance to do quite well. Only a sophomore, Baird is likely to make a couple of return trips to the All-State meet in the coming years.

Among the milers who'll be facing Cohasset's Baird on the Norwell High track on Saturday, Silver Lake's Mike Piche looks to have the best shot at moving on to New Englands. Piche, the Lakers' school-record holder in 4:23, won a tight Class A race that saw the top-four finishers cross the line in a span of 1.4 seconds. He won with a time of 4:27.1 and will, no doubt, be running to lower his school record at the All-States.

The Cohasset 4x100-meter relay team of Krupczak, Khalil Madyun, Craig Parker and Steve Laney also will be in action at the All-State meet, able to sneak in with a fourth place finish, the last qualifying position.

Krupczak said the team is likely to fare better on Saturday than it did in finishing in 45.2 seconds at the Class D meet.

"We're going to be rested, which is going to make a huge difference," he said. "On Saturday, I had run the 200 and long jumped, Craig had done a couple of events and Khalil had already run a race. We were pretty tired. I think we'll run a much better time at the all-states."

The Skippers also possess depth in doubles that few other teams can match. The first doubles team of senior Jessie Zerendow and junior Ary Ashtar has lost only three times all season, while the second doubles team of Kelly Stone and Jessica Niessink are undefeated at second doubles.

At 9-1, the Skippers are likely to receive a high seed in the Div. 2 tournament, where rankings are done based on a team's winning percentage.

The Skippers could be in for a lengthy tournament run, since many of the South region's strongest teams, such as Framingham, Duxbury, Sandwich, Notre Dame and Hingham, will compete in Division 1.

game, and they'd tied us the first time we played them, so I knew they'd come back. At 9-9, we finally realized what we had to do."

Kahn and sophomore Kristin Sheerin took control of the offense, scoring four of the game's final five goals, while Petrakis made four key saves and cleared the ball effectively to Libby, Stansell and sophomore Maggie O'Neil.

Sheerin finished the game with six goals, while Kahn had four scores and an assist. Genovese added two goals in her best performance of the season, and Chastain rounded out the scoring with a single tally.

After the game, Gaudiano announced that Jackie Kahn, for the second year, had been named to the Eastern Massachusetts South All-Star team.

"Jackie's award was nominated by the Hingham coach," said Gaudiano, "and voted unanimously by the other coaches in the league. That reflects both the regard she's held in, and the reality that in every game she was double- and triple-teamed because the coaches knew they had to stop her."

Despite the loss of Kahn and the other graduating seniors, Gaudiano has high hopes for next season.

"We should have excellent balance next year with leading goal-scorer Kristin Sheerin returning, and with Sera Genovese, Carlie Carter and Maggie O'Neil all becoming key parts of the offense," she said. "I also expect big contributions from freshmen Yazi Afshar, Maura McKenney and Katherine Coyne."

Gaudiano said that an anticipated league realignment should help Cohasset, which finished its season with a 4-9-2 record.

"At the coaches' meeting," she said, "we learned that Marshfield, Norwell and Scituate — all of whom we beat this year in non-league games and scrimmages — will join our league, and that the Vineyard and New Bedford will drop out. Our travel should be more manageable and, as a result, we'll set a goal to make the post-season tournament."

Murderous schedule kills boys lacrosse tourney hopes

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset boys lacrosse team started off strong this season, but its unbelievably tough schedule cost them down the stretch, as the Skippers lost their last six games and failed to make the state tournament, finishing 6-10.

"All of our losses were to MIAA tournament teams," said coach Paul Sporn. "We had two overtime losses, four losses by one goal, and another loss by two goals. We were close, but we just didn't get it done."

Sporn said the team's youth-defenseman Bill Good was the only senior, coupled with its thin bench served to cost the Skippers in late-game situations.

"All of our losses were to MIAA tournament teams."

Boys lacrosse coach Paul Sporn

"We played a lot of good matches, we just couldn't finish when we needed to," Sporn said. "I attribute that to our inexperience and just being worn down at the end of games. The last couple of games, we were only dressing 14 or 15 kids."

The other factor, of course, was the difficult schedule. The Pilgrim Conference is an outstanding lacrosse league, and Cohasset faced tough competition all season.

From the conference, Falmouth is the third seed in the Div. 1 tournament, Duxbury is seeded fourth and Marshfield is 14th.

In Div.2, Hingham is seeded second, Nantucket is seeded fourth and Sandwich is sixth.

The Skippers showed just how close they are to the better teams in the tournament in their final game of the season last week, tough 7-6 loss to Nantucket.

"It was a great game, back and forth," Sporn said. "Both teams were up by as many as two goals. But we just weren't able to put them away."

To beat teams like Nantucket next season, Sporn said players like junior midfielder Ronan Buick, a Pilgrim Conference second-team all-star, will have to step up.

"I expect to get a lot of leadership from this year's junior class next season, Sporn said. "We need to set our goals high and have a commitment to making the tournament from day one. If we get that kind of commitment, I think we'll see a tremendous improvement in the outcomes of games next season."

Sporn has two offensive stars to focus on in Buick and sophomore attackman Pete Kovach.

"Ronan had a very good year and he'll definitely be one of the leaders of the team next year," Sporn said. "Pete also put up some big numbers (17 goals, 34 assists for 51 points) for us."

With that kind of talent on board, the boys lacrosse team could show a dramatic turnaround next season if the breaks just go their way.

Fredericks of talking to the opposing coaches. "This is a great time, because you get to talk to everybody."

Fredericks' counterpart in the other dugout, Hanover coach Fran Coyle, would agree with him. Like the Patriot League coaches, the South Shore League skippers also visited during the game in front of the dugout, while taking turns coaches the bases.

"It's a good time," said Coyle. "All of the kids got to play."

Coyle, no stranger to all-star games, came up with a unique way of putting the batting order together.

"My wife asked me how I was going to do it," he said. "I batted all of the seniors at the top, followed by the juniors and the sophomores."

Whether they were playing in the field or not, all of players on both teams were sent up to the plate.

While the focus of the game was to honor the all-stars from both leagues and have some fun, Coyle was able to get a chance to see something he hopes to see a lot of in the upcoming state tournament.

Hanover senior Gary Mahler, who started the game at short, came on in relief in the bottom of the ninth inning to get the save.

"We've used him during the season that way a couple of times," said Coyle. "It's nice to have him in that role."

The coaches agreed to switch from the usual seven inning during the season format to the nine innings so that all of the pitchers could see action.

Norwell's Rob Savoy picked up the win on the mound and also hit a solo homer over the 43-foot fence in left-center in the eighth inning to cut the lead to 7-5.

The South Shore stars got to within one when Norton's Sean Ribeiro singled home Mahler later in the inning.

In the second inning, the Patriot League jumped out to a 3-0 lead. Rockland's Ed O'Neil had a single to knock home Middleboro's Daryl Bradford. Hingham's Jim Battista, who walked, and O'Neil scored the other runs.

In the top of the fourth, Carver's Jason Kingston, who was the starting pitcher for the South Shore squad, singled in Cohasset's Doug O'Brien and then scored on a double by Hanover's Sam Moores.

Rob Savoy drew a walk and both Savoy and Moores scored on a double by Hanover's Ryan Hilyard.

The Patriot stars came right back with two runs as Matt Singleton singled home one and another came home on an error.

East Bridgewater's Kevin Luddy had a single to score O'Neil, who singled in the sixth and finished up the day going 2-2. Scituate's Jess Cole singled in the seventh and scored to give the Patriot stars a 7-4 lead before the South Shore League's comeback.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

Ellie Baumgarten, a third-grader, enjoys Osgood's Arbor Day celebration.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Osgood celebrates Arbor Day

The Joseph Osgood Elementary School celebrated Arbor Day Tuesday, May 23 in a morning filled with music and dedications. Kindergarten through third grades performed a variety of music with the help of John MacInnis, the music teacher at the Osgood School. A special rendition of "What a Wonderful World" was offered by former third-grade students of teacher Kendra Coburn who died suddenly in 1999. In her memory, the students "signed" to the song as she had taught them. A Dogwood tree has been planted in the front of the new school in her honor. The musical performance finished with a solo by third-grader Jessica Dupre, who sang "The Golden Rule."

Also included in the ceremony were dedications to old and new. The new Joseph Osgood School, built in 1998, is the third location of the school bearing the same name. Because of donations made by the Cohasset PSO, the new school received its sign as part of the Arbor Day celebration. Dave Hassan, of Hassan Sign, donated his labor to create the school sign. Hassan grew up in Cohasset, and was a student at the Ripley Road location of the Joseph Osgood School.

The PSO donated the funds and Dave Hassan of Hassan Sign donated his labor for the new school sign that was part of the Arbor Day events.

In honor of Arbor Day, trees were planted at the front of the school building. Thanks go out to the Community Garden Club of Cohasset and Eastern Utilities for the donations of trees, and the Garden Club of Cohasset for its help in the design and planting of the new trees.

New director at helm of Carriage House Nursery School

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

In addition to the usual influx of three- and four-year-olds, there will be another new face at the Carriage House Nursery School in the fall.

Georgiana "Georgie" Tweed Gladdys is taking over the reins from Sally Atkinson who is stepping down as teacher-director after 25 years.

Although the nursery school is affiliated with the First Parish Church, it is non-denominational.

"The search committee was looking for someone in the area that had a lot of experience working with young children," said Sena Pounder, who sits on the advisory board that is the conduit between the parish committee and the nursery school.

And Gladdys, who is from Plymouth, fit the bill.

"There was a good pool of excellent candidates," Pounder said. "We were very lucky."

Gladdys comes with 20 years experience in the field of early childhood education and most recently spent seven years as assistant director at the Beth Israel Deaconess Childcare Center.

She said coming to an "old-fashioned" nursery school in Cohasset appealed to her right away.

> "Someone can have all the credentials but it is a matter of finding the match that has the right comfort level."
> — Sena Pounder

"I like the smallness of it that will provide me with the ability to implement some very creative early childhood programs," Gladdys said. "And I'm looking forward to collaborating with both the parents and teachers."

She is careful to point out, however, that she likes what she sees.

Gladdys welcomes the task of coming to a well-established nursery school and taking the challenge of moving it forward into the new millennium while keeping much the same that has worked well.

She said the advertisement for the position came at the right time when she was looking for a change. The commute to Boston is not something she'll miss.

Gladdys said when she met the search committee, she knew accepting the position, if offered, would be an easy decision.

"A wonderful conversation happened," she said. "It wasn't really an interview but an amazing conversation about children."

The committee conducted two interviews with Gladdys in Cohasset and visited her twice while on the job at Beth Israel before reaching a decision.

Pounder said there were seven candidates on the "short list."

"Someone can have all the credentials but it is a matter of finding the match that has the right comfort level," she said. The things the committee looked for in a director were new programs and how the person would work with staff and parents.

"You get a feeling for that as you talk," Pounder explained.

The nursery school values its teachers and both Sarah Stevens and Shirley Wallace are coming back in the fall, Pounder said.

Gladdys said she has a penchant for science and knows that the exploring the environment — both outside and inside — is a natural for children.

"I'm looking forward to giving children the opportunity to explore the natural and physical world," she said.

Gladdys said there would be lots of walks where the children can collect things and bring them back into the classroom. She plans on setting up aquariums and will provide areas where the children can learn about bugs, mud, worms and little plants.

"I can't wait to do that," she said.

When it comes to physics, Gladdys is just as enthusiastic. She'll set up castles with moats and drawbridges and show the children how they work.

"I believe in grabbing those teachable moments for children," she said.

Gladdys is married with two children — one in high school and one in college. Her husband is director of development at GBH Macomber, a construction company.

For information about the Carriage House Nursery School hours, programs and tuition, call Pounder at 383-6869 or Gladdys at 508-747-5641.

Edward Thaxter House: A reminder of times gone by

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

The Edward Thaxter House on lower Main Street conjures up in the mind a gentler, slower age, a time when people traveled by horse and carriage and left calling cards, when women's skirts brushed against dirt walks and parasols were held up against the sun. Dominated by a handsome two-story portico that suggests the elegance to be found within, the Thaxter house is one of five antique homes included on the Hingham Historical Society House Tour, which will take place on June 14.

Built in 1811 for Edward Thaxter by his father Henry, this Federalist gem is in an area of similarly grand homes once known as "bachelor's row," probably because their owners were prominent squires or landowners, not necessarily because they were single gentlemen, the more modern definition of bachelor. In fact the Thaxter House was a twin, across the street, built at about the same time by Captain Isaac Hinkley, obviously from the same or very similar plans. The duplication would seem to have been inadvertent since it resulted in a vigorous rivalry between the two men.

In 1837, four years before his death, Thaxter sold the house to Caroline MacDonough, described in contemporary writings as a "single woman." She, in turn, in 1866, sold it to Boston Lawyer Charles F. Shimmin, who, during a period of his ownership, rented out the residence. One of his tenants was an Episcopal day and boarding school, where, according to one account, "young ladies were prepared for admission to Wellesley, Smith and Mount Holyoke."

Today, the Edward Thaxter House gives no hint of the educational academy it once was. The beneficiary of numerous changes over the years, including the addition of that fine portico and an extension to the rear in the Greek Revival style, the house has mostly been enhanced by its various alterations. That continues with its present owners, Robin and Warren Pelissier. Like others who have bought one of Hingham's precious antique homes, the Pelissiers consider their occupation of such a venerable dwelling an obligation as much as a pleasure. Protecting and carrying on a legacy is how Robin Pelissier regards her role as owner of the Thaxter House.

"It really has been with pleasure that Warren and I have done this little bit of restoration and renovation to preserve the antiquity of the home. People often walk by here and say, "This is the most beautiful example of federal architecture in the country, and we do feel a great sense of responsibility to that," said Pelissier.

In the house since Dec. 1998 (having lived just up the street for the previous five years), the Pelissiers have made some major changes, many having to do with restoring period components that had been removed or covered up during previous renovations. These include putting down a hardwood floor in the new, expanded kitchen and removing what Robin Pelissier describes as an "inappropriate (to the era in which the house was built) greenhouse. A professional interior designer, she has had to make some hard decisions in order to upgrade the house for the comfort of her family, which includes four children, while at the same time not compromising its historic integrity. Thus, she thought hard and long before removing a huge iron kitchen range that's as old as the house itself.

"But it was just too big; it took up the whole kitchen," said Pelissier, who did, however, make sure to find the appliance a good home.

...this Federalist gem is in an area of similarly grand homes once known as "bachelor's row," probably because their owners were prominent squires or landowners, not necessarily because they were single gentlemen, the more modern definition of bachelor.

The Edward Thaxter House, 147 Main St., is featured in the Hingham Historical Society House Tour, June.

The main staircase inside the Edward Thaxter House.

If she had to get rid of the stove, Pelissier otherwise was determined to keep the kitchen renovation as authentic as possible. "We gutted the kitchen and actually tried to restore it back by adding a pantry, which we did by basing it on photographs that (the previous owners) share with us."

The care lavished on the house by the Pelissiers and their predecessors is evident in its pristine condition, which includes all the original paneling and moldings, inside shutters and the graceful staircase that ends in a small balcony.

A house so sprawling that Pelissier isn't sure of its actual size, decorating the grand rooms has been a tantalizing challenge. Still in the process of hanging paper, painting walls, and upholstering furniture at the time of this interview, Pelissier was taking full advantage of the house's generous proportions and rich architectural detailing to create a truly luxurious setting.

Describing her and her husband's tastes as more old-world than contemporary, Pelissier is decorating the house with great elegance. She indicates changes she will make in the entry hall. "Right now," she says, "the wallpaper is a bedroom floral. We'd like to remove that and put up a damask, which probably will be more in keeping with what was originally in the house."

They've also removed blue wall-to-wall carpeting which covered the stairs and upstairs rooms, replacing it with a low-pile, wool-velvet burgundy rug, "which we feel is closer to what would have been here" in the beginning.

The intent isn't to be slavish to the era in which the house was built, but "to make it beautiful."

Definitely new to the house is the mudroom off the kitchen, a space that once probably was used by earlier owners as a potting shed. Pelissier muses.

When the Pelissiers bought the Thaxter House they believed their old furniture would fit in very well. "But, then, I was shocked to discover how many windows there were," a problem when you're looking for wall space.

"Take this room, for example," said Pelissier, indicating the library. "There are seven openings in here, four windows, two entrances and a fireplace." Besides a plethora of windows and doors throughout the house, there are seven fireplaces.

"That makes it really difficult; we have so many antique chests and nowhere to put them."

As lovely as the house is Pelissier was particularly attracted to the property because of its spacious grounds, which include a formal garden and an outbuilding that once was used to stable horses.

Gazing across manicured lawns, Pelissier remembered her early fantasies about living in the Thaxter House. "I could just picture my children playing here."

In addition to five homes on the tour, several other sites of historical significance will be open to visitors. Those include two buildings owned by the Historical Society: Old Derby, the sit of the oldest co-educational school in the country, and the Old Ordinary, a house museum that has a fine collection of antique artifacts, and during the tour will have on view the special exhibition, "Bevy of Brides," composed of 19th- and early 20th-century wedding gowns. Other points of interest are the Old Ship Meeting House, the oldest church of continuous worship in the Untitled States; the Memorial Bell Tower, adjacent to the meeting house; St. Paul's Catholic Church in downtown Hingham, whose rectory is listed as the oldest house in Hingham because it contains elements of the 1640 Albert Fearing House, and Hingham Cemetery, where many of the town's earliest settlers are buried.

Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 on tour day. They are available in advance at Bowl and Board in Hingham Square and at the Hingham Public Library on Leavitt Street. To order tickets by mail, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a check for the number of tickets required to Hingham Historical Society, P.O. Box 434, Hingham, 02043. Mark the envelope "House Tour." Tickets on the day of the tour will be sold only at the Old Ordinary, 21 Lincoln St., beginning at 10 a.m. At that time, too, tickets purchased in advance can be exchanged for tour books. Light refreshments will be served at one of the houses. No cameras or spike heels are allowed.

The Maritime Museum, located in the unique 18th-century Ship Chandlery originally of Samuel Bates, houses collections relating to Cohasset's maritime history, mainly from the "Age of Sail" during the 19th century. Included in its exhibits are artifacts from the town's 19th-century fishing fleets, sections devoted to shipwrecks, lifesaving and navigation, also an exhibit showing the history of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouses.

Featured in museum exhibits are a number of ship models showing sailing vessels of the 19th century. The collection of models includes two of Donald McKay's East Boston-built clipper ships and a hull model of an early Cohasset fishing schooner of a type known as a "pinky," dating from the early 1800s.

The museum's second floor holds exhibits of general historical interest, ranging from Native American stone tools to an early cordwainer's desk and tools, housewright's tools, desk and chair from one of Cohasset's first schoolhouses, a display of old maps of the town and numerous other artifacts from Cohasset's early days. The old Chandlery building itself, of post and beam construction, is the only example remaining of the buildings dating from Cohasset's early years as a maritime community, and is largely unaltered.

The Cohasset Historical Society's telephone is (781) 383-1434.

POLICE BRIEF

17 arrests over the weekend

Cohasset police were swamped over Memorial Day weekend with a total of 17 arrests that included juveniles and minors.

"There were two separate incidents at Sandy Cove that resulted in five or six arrests," Sgt. Robert Jackson said. "One juvenile was transported to South Shore Hospital because of excessive consumption of alcohol."

Two of the arrests over the weekend also involved abuse of the drug Ritalin that is snorted to get a high, police said.

Jackson pointed out that all the arrests did not involve kids.

"There was a cross-section including arrests for OUI, warrants, domestic assault & battery and youth gatherings where there was underage drinking," he said.

Jackson said the police have a night-vision device that allows them to sit and observe the minors with alcohol and or marijuana before "they throw it into the woods and think they're good to go and they're not."

Police also issued 37 motor vehicle violations over the weekend.

Water commission to revive two wells

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset needs to be well prepared for a severe water emergency. Not the kind of emergency that prevents residents from watering their lawns. The type of emergency that leaves people wondering whether they can pour a glass of water or draw a bath.

"What would we do if the plant went down, or if there was a severe drought and we couldn't get water from Hingham and Scituate?" asked Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. "We need a dependable back-up water supply."

That's exactly what the water commission had in mind when it requested, and received, $500,000 from town meeting last March to rehabilitate the Ellms Meadow and Sohier Street well fields. The $500,000 allocation is part of a $1.6 million loan package dedicated to the wells. The water commission will devote $300,000 to the Ellms Meadow well field and the remaining $200,000 to the Sohier Street fields.

Currently, the commission is overseeing work on the Ellms Meadow field. The Sohier Street well field cannot be rehabilitated until the town completes negotiations with the MBTA over the impact the Greenbush Rail Road would have on the water supply. Together, the two well fields could supply 400,000 gallons of water per day for emergencies.

"If we place all restrictions on water use — no lawn watering, no sprinklers-we can get by on 400,000 gallons per day," McNabb said. "The quality of water at these two well fields is good, and we have the capacity to supply the town with the minimum amount of water it needs each day."

Ellms Meadow has been closed since 1994, when a pipe that connected the well field to the water plant broke. At that time, the water commission had to deal with more pressing problems; action was delayed on the Ellms Meadow well field. Now the commissioners are ready to put the well field back online, at least as an emergency water supply. In part, the water commissioners are responding to a directive from the Department of Environmental Protection to rehabilitate the well fields or abandon them.

McNabb said the Tutela engineering, the commission's consultant, currently is seeking permits from DEP to begin work on the well. The plan calls for a contractor to raze the old building and build a new one, replace the old pumps and repair pipes and wells. McNabb said the commissioners are hoping to rehabilitate the Ellms Meadow well filed within 12 months.

"Another piece of good news is that we need to do a zone delineation for the Ellms Meadow well field, and DEP has received a federal grant to do that for us," McNabb said. "That will save us tens-of-thousands of dollars. The Ellms Meadow well field has a clean bill of health, adequate funding, and the possibility of being turned on at anytime. It would be nice to get this online as a back-up supply." Rehabilitating the Sohier Street well field will be more complicated, McNabb said. The Sohier Street well field has two wells, Well 1 and Well 2.

Well 1 is about 50-feet away from the Greenbush tracks. DEP regulations require the well to be at least 400-feet from the tracks. The MBTA is required to mitigate the effects of Greenbush on the communities that will be impacted by the presence of the trains. McNabb said the MBTA said it would move the well to an appropriate location, but only after it finishes the final environmental impact report on Greenbush. That process could take a year or more, McNabb said. The advantage of Well 1 is that it could serve as a permanent water supply, much like the Ellms Meadow wells, if it is relocated by the MBTA. The water commissioners have enough money to build new buildings, and to purchase new pumps. McNabb said Tutela is looking for alternative sites for Well 1.

Well 2 is located too close to several septic systems for use as a permanent water supply, but it could be used for emergencies. Well 2 is not close enough to the tracks to require the MBTA to relocate it. Although the water commission is rehabilitating the wells mainly for emergency use, it's nice to have them available for use anytime, McNabb said.

MBTA may cut weekend ferry service to Boston

George's Island run expected to continue

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

It looks like weekend ferry service from Hingham to Boston may soon be past history.

It's expected, however, that even if ferry trips to the city are discontinued, weekend trips to George's Island will continue throughout the summer season.

The MBTA board of directors will take a vote on the issue in June.

Budgetary considerations are a prime factor. The T paid $101,000 to Boston Harbor Cruises in 1998 and 1999 to provide weekend ferry service from Hingham Shipyard to Rowe's Wharf along with $1 million annually to run the weekday commuter boat service, according to published reports.

"No decision has been made yet, but there is a concern about the low ridership on weekends," said Brian Pedro, spokesman for the MBTA.

According to statistics, only about 660 passengers a day use the weekend ferries, while more than 4,000 ride the weekday runs daily. The MBTA's per-rider subsidy on the weekend is about $11 per passenger, which Pedro said is "not acceptable."

He denies there's any political motivation behind the move.

"The decision will be based purely on ridership figures and money," he said.

Pedro also confirmed that there are no plans to curtail the regular weekday ferry service from Hingham Shipyard to Boston.

"No decision has been made yet, but there is a concern about the low ridership on weekends."

— Brian Pedro, spokesman for the MBTA.

It's expected Harbor Express, which runs unsubsidized weekend ferry service to Logan Airport and the downtown Boston area from the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy, will pick up some of the weekend business.

In fact, William Walker, manager of Harbor Express, is looking forward to the potential increase in riders.

"The ferry is a really nice way to go into Boston," he said. "You can hop on a boat, cruise into the city and enjoy the outings and concerts Boston has to offer."

The Harbor Express weekend service is already popular.

"There are a number of families with kids who like to go in, even during the late afternoon to explore Boston," Walker said.

That's due in part to the extensive and flexible service the company's schedule offers.

Seventeen trips a day are scheduled on Saturdays, landing by the Aquarium in the Faneuil Hall area. The ferry also makes trips to the Fleet Boston Pavilion according to the concert schedule. The ferries run from 8 a.m. Saturday, leaving Quincy, until the last trip from Boston at 11:25 p.m. Sunday runs take place between 8 a.m. and 10:05 p.m.

Starting this July, the MBTA will not be allowed to spend more than it receives from assessments on towns and cities, fares, advertising and 20 percent of the state's sales tax income.

Hingham selectman chairman Martin Crane would like to see the figures regarding weekend ridership to see if the cut in service is justified.

"If it is, we still have another viable option open," he said, referring to boat service out of Fore River Shipyard.

Winners for best country act at the Boston Music Awards this spring. The Dave Foley Band gets down.

Norwell's Mount Blue was rockin' Monday when VH1 made a South Shore stop for a rock 'n' roll benefit.

Close to 300 attended the private party at the popular restaurant whose investors include Aerosmith band members Steven Tyler of Marshfield and Joe Perry of Duxbury. The event was a benefit for Revere public schools and also a promotion for an upcoming VH1 film about the history of rock'n'roll.

Boston Music Award winners Johnny A and the Dave Foley band performed during the evening and Aerosmith's Brad Whitford stopped in to jam as well. Boston band member Tom Scholz was also on the guest list for the party.

Five autographed guitars signed by Tyler, Perry, Whitford and Scholz were to be auctioned via the Internet following the event for $1,000 to $5,000 with proceeds going to Revere schools as part of VH1's Save the Music education program.

Party-goers also got a sneak preview of VH1's new original flick "It's Only Rock & Roll" chronicling 50 years of rock music and films. The movie premiered the new National Amusements Showcase Cinema in Revere Tuesday. The Cinema company and VH1 are both owned by Viacom, Inc.

Quick Fruit Gratin

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

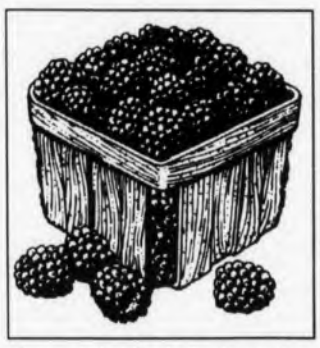
CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

By Christopher Kimball
SPECIAL TO CNS

There are times of the year when the fresh fruit is so good and ripe that it seems a shame to put it into a pie, a crumble, a grunt, a pandowdy, or even a crisp. You want the fruit to be the star - not the pie dough, the dumpling, the cake batter, or the sweet crisp topping. Yet, you want a bit of texture to offset the fruit, something to add a touch of crispness to an otherwise soft dessert.

The answer is a gratin, which is any dish topped with either cheese or breadcrumbs and butter and then heated in an oven or run under the broiler. I found such a recipe in Jacques Pépin's excellent dessert book "Sweet Simplicity." He uses frozen raspberries, places them in individual ramekins, and then tops them with cake or croissant crumbs that have been processed with a bit of butter and sugar. The desserts are baked briefly and then served with a dollop of sour cream or crème fraîche. All in all, an excellent and quick dessert.

However, I was interested in using fresh fruit and, not having cake or croissants on hand, thought that store-bought bread might work. I also wanted to eliminate the ramekins and use one large baking pan to make things easier. I started with an 8-inch square baking pan (a 9-inch pie plate also works) and found that 4 cups of fruit fit nicely. I added lemon juice to brighten the flavor of the fruit after baking and added a touch of sugar as well. I wanted contrast between the sweet topping and the fruit but thought 2 to 3 tablespoons of sugar were needed to boost the fruit flavor. (The larger quantity of sugar is best for tart berries.) Next I played around with breads and tried challah, sourdough, whole wheat bread, hearty sandwich breads, and lousy supermarket presliced loaves. Not wanting the flavor of the bread to get in the way of the dessert (the topping started to taste like toast) I settled on a plain white bread. (Challah was good but not always available.) Unfortunately, cheap supermarket breads don't process well – they are too gummy – so you will need a good hearty white loaf. Any decent plain white bakery sandwich loaf will do, as will a high-quality supermarket sandwich bread.



I found that the butter has to be cold – straight from the refrigerator – and a food processor is essential for making the topping. Oven temperatures were tested and 400 degrees was perfect – more heat burned the topping in spots and a cooler oven did not brown the topping adequately. Since the baking time is so short, stone fruits (such as peaches) need to be sliced in thin, 1/2-inch pieces to soften properly.

QUICK FRUIT GRATIN WITH BREAD CRUMB TOPPING

Berries make the quickest dessert since they do not have to be pitted or sliced. Ripe peaches, however, make a terrific gratin. This dessert can also be made with frozen raspberries. (Do not thaw before baking.)

4 cups ripe fruit such as raspberries, blackberries, peaches, nectarines, plums, or apricots, washed, peeled, and cut into 1/2-inch slices as needed
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 to 3 tablespoons sugar
3 medium-thick slices good quality white bakery bread
3 tablespoons unsalted butter, cold
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup sugar
Sour cream, whipped cream, or vanilla ice cream for serving, optional

1. Heat oven to 400 degrees and adjust rack to center position. Toss fruit with lemon juice and 2 to 3 tablespoons sugar. (Use larger amount for tart fruit.) Place in an 8-inch square baking pan or in a 9-inch pie pan.

2. Meanwhile, tear bread into large pieces and pulse with cold butter, salt, and 1/4 cup sugar in the bowl of a food processor to produce bread crumbs. The butter should be in pieces no larger than lentils. Sprinkle on top of fruit. 3. Bake for 15 to 20 minutes or until the fruit is juicy and the topping is well browned. Cool for 5 minutes and serve with optional sour cream, whipped cream, or vanilla ice cream.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

5/30/00 tc/fj

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

TUESDAY, MAY 30

It may be difficult to get back to business and practical matters today. The Aries moon continues inactive travel until 11:02 a.m. Allow extra time to get where you are going. There may be delays or unexpected distractions. Relief arrives at 11:02 a.m., when an earthy Taurus moon takes over. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Neptune favors all creative pursuits. Gardening, arts and crafts projects, painting and redecorating get the green light. Beautify your environment. A lunar alignment to Neptune sets the stage for a quiet evening.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda today. Rather than launching new ventures, influences favor finishing old business. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. A Taurus moon prompts you to work outdoors; focus on lawn or garden projects. A lunar alignment to Uranus in effect between 7:39-10:39 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the day. Keep it light.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1

Plan to get important projects off the ground during the first two weeks in June. A Mercury retrograde period affects the latter half, offering a change of pace and priorities. Influences today may generate stormy emotional weather. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect. In addition, a polarity of the sun and Pluto occurs. Others may be moody, pensive, distracted. This is a day for cleaning out, letting go. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 2:08 a.m. until 1 2:34 p.m., when it enters Gemini.

FRIDAY, JUNE 2

Gear up for a fast-paced day. This month's new moon culminates at 8:14 a.m., 12-degrees of Gemini. A harmonious alignment of Mars and Uranus prompts you to be more inventive, open-minded, spontaneous. New starts across the board are recommended. The evening is prime for social activities, romantic encounters. Take a walk on the wild side. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 10:03 p.m., when it aligns with Mars.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3

This day has its ups and downs. A polarity of Venus/Pluto takes center stage. Postpone making important decisions or purchases. Don't get caught up in negative behavior or bad habits, like nursing old grudges, feeling resentful, fearful. This is a time when you can gain new awareness that will help you to make significant changes in your personal life. Look within. The Gemini moon is inactive until 12:30 p.m., when it enters Cancer.

SUNDAY, JUNE 4

A Cancer moon makes this day ideal for spending extra time with family and close friends. New starts in your personal life are recommended. This day is also favorable for beginning home improvement projects or for purchasing furniture or appliances.

MONDAY, JUNE 5

The Cancer moon becomes inactive at 3:48 a.m. until 12:45 p.m., making for a slow-starting Monday morning. People may be feeling tired and can be temperamental, hypersensitive. Choose your words carefully. Plan to finish old business rather than starting new activities. A Leo moon takes over at 12:45 p.m. and opposes Neptune at 11:12 p.m. Focus on projects that require your imagination and creativity. Kick back, relax and unwind this evening.

Weymouth launches Arts Festival

Cultural council event is June 3

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Where can you find fine art, live music and dramatic performances in one place? You'll find it all this weekend at the first ever Weymouth Arts Festival. Located at the Ralph Talbot Civic Center with additional exhibits at the Abigail Adams School, the festival gets underway at 10 a.m. on June 3.

The event is sponsored by the Weymouth Cultural Council, and funded through a grant by the Massachusetts Cultural Council. Admission to the event is free to the public.

"None of the performers or artists are being paid," said Bette DeAngelis, a member of the Weymouth Cultural Council. DeAngelis spearheaded the implementation of the art festival, but she stressed the event was the result of hard work from many people.

She said people who played a big role in getting the festival going were fellow cultural council members Delores Jakaus, Jonothan Verdun, Dr. Pat Doyle-Assad, and Mary Sue Goodick. Other people who helped out include Sandy Pohl (president of the Weymouth Art Association), Olga Segala (president of the Weymouth Garden Club), Jane Ketchen (member of historical commission), Jodi Purdy-Quinlan (president of the Abigail Adams Society), and Elizabeth Murphy of the Tufts Library.

"Everybody who's participating or performing in the festival has some connection to Weymouth," she added. "In addition to all these people who helped, we also got tremendous support from the Weymouth school department." She added the parks and recreation department is also helping by providing a van for "parking transport."

DeAngelis said the festival will include a number of artists who will demonstrate various artistic mediums. She said there will be a number of musical acts, including performances from members of the Southeastern Philharmonic Orchestra, as well as performances by the New Song Folk Singers, the Abigail Adams seventh grade chorus, and also by the Abigail Adams after school chorus.

DeAngelis said there will also be stage performances by organizations like the Company Theater of Norwell, the Abigail Adams Drama Club, Boston Tae Kwon Do, and the Murphy School Tots.

A number of outdoor events will also take place during the course of the day. Festival-goers will have the chance to try their hand at making T-shirts, catch a bag-piper in action and check out extravagant garden displays.

Painters from around the area will demonstrate their art in mediums including watercolor and oil. There will Floral designer Joanne Caccavale will give flower arranging demonstrations.

DeAngelis said the whole day will kick off at 10 a.m. with a performance by the Abigail Adams After School Chorus singing "Songs of the Millenium." David M. Madden, Weymouth's mayor, will also be on hand for the opening ceremonies.

In the event of rain, DeAngelis said the Weymouth Cultural Council has reserved the gymnasium of the Abigail Adams school to hold the event.

"This is a great new focus and a wonderful forum for Weymouth artists," DeAngelis said of the event. She said the cultural council had been brainstorming the event for a long time. When it came down to finding local artists who could participate in such an event, DeAngelis said the City of Weymouth had plenty of talent contained within its borders.

Joanne Caccavalle will demonstrate the art of floral design during the festival.

Student artwork including this photo titled "Adam" by Allison Carroll will also be on display during this weekend's Weymouth Arts Festival.

"We kind of beat the drum a bit," she said. "We invited all the people we knew about through the cultural council, and sent letters of invitation to them to submit their (artistic) proposals."

The end result? "We've got loads of people in this thing, and it's happening all day long," she said.

DeAngelis firmly believes the day will be a success because the cultural council has been promoting it through local television shows and other media.

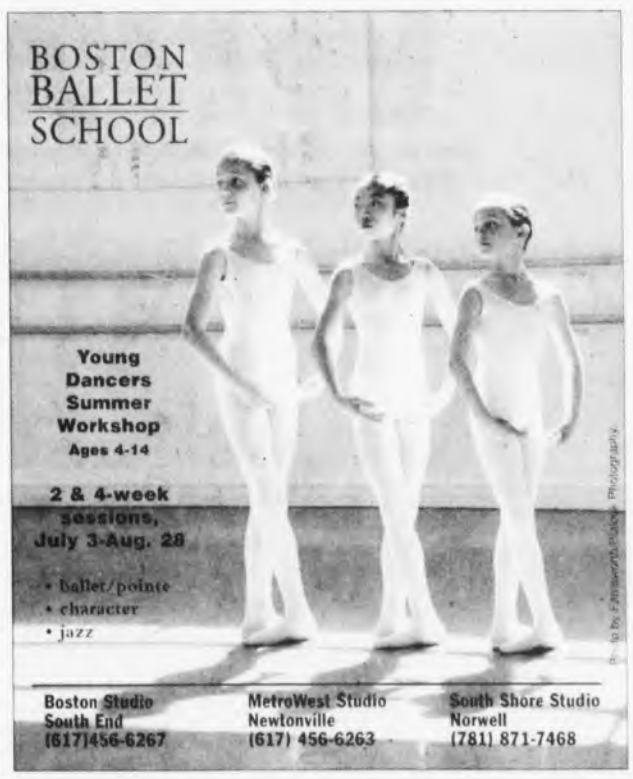
"We've got such a mixed bag here," she said. "And I think we've spread the word pretty well."

DeAngelis said she would like to see this year's festival be the first of many, but she said she feels like it shouldn't be the cultural council's job to sponsor it every year.

"We're hoping we stimulate enough interest in people that others will take up the responsibility next time around," she said. "We have a lot of talent here in town, so we're hoping those people will take it over and initiate it themselves."

"There are a lot of wonderful art festivals happening all over the South Shore and they all take on their own character. Ours is going to take on a real hometown feeling."

For information on the Weymouth Arts Festival call the cultural council at (781) 335-2000.



Juli Ford

'Quiet House' makes some noise

Quincy native's debut album earns raves from local critics

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Sometimes, Juli Ford dreams about the songs she's going to write.

Other times, she just hears melodies and catch phrases in her mind.

Either way, Ford finds the way to make the melodies and phrases into thoughtful songs. She's proven that on her recently released debut album "The Quiet House."

Local critics have been raving about the album and its lyrical and musical intimacy.

Ford, 31, of Quincy, said the album was composed by herself and her partner named Ross Ramsay.

"We wrote all the material together," Ford said. "We've been working together for about five years."

Ford said she met Ramsay in a band she joined many years ago. But ever since the two hooked up, the musical chemistry has been flowing. Ford said there is not one particular way they write songs.

"Most of the time, I write the lyrics and we both put the music together," Ford said. "There's not just one way we write. Sometimes (Ramsay) has a musical idea and he brings it to me, and it also happens the other way around. I've even dreamt about songs and when I wake up, I find I can still remember them. Some songs even just start as poems that I've written."

Ford said she classifies her music as "acoustic pop-rock. It's a bit folky, but not real folky." Her lyrics and the songs on the new album come from many different arenas in her life.

The album's title, said Ford was actually inspired by a book she read called "A Child Called It" by Dave Pelzer. The book is about a young man who is forced to put up with watching his parents abuse his younger brother.

"The book is about an awful circumstance of child abuse," Ford said, "but the message of the book is phenomenally uplifting. A lot of the lyrics I write I get from reading books. I am definitely an avid reader."

Ford said on her website, she is promoting her own music, but she is also promoting books she enjoys through a "cyber book group" she is implementing. Not surprisingly, the first book to be featured is "A Child Called It."

Ford's musical influences include legends like Paul Simon, Eva Cassidy, Bonnie Raitt, and even contemporary rockers like Sheryl Crow. Even though Ford says she's "not much of a guitar player," she noted her lyrics are often influenced by the aforementioned musicians. Her songs also come out of personal experiences, even when she doesn't mean to write them that way.

"You can't help but have part of yourself in a song even if you don't mean it," Ford said. Her own very happy childhood served as some of the musical inspiration. The graphic on the actual CD contained in her new album is a picture of the Plymouth cottage she summered in while growing up.

> "I think that if people can feel connected to a piece of music, it's good. If someone can listen to a song, and find a piece of themselves in it, it's well worth it."
> Singer/songwriter Juli Ford

"I have great memories of that place," she said.

Ford explained when it came time for recording her CD, it was only she and Ramsay who recorded the album. Ramsay played all the instruments on the album and Ford concentrated on the vocals

"We really compliment each other," Ford said of Ramsay. "We work really well together, and during the recording of the album, we had time on our side. We didn't have to rush because the studio we recorded in belongs to (Ramsay). It was definitely a luxury not having to watch a clock."

Ford noted other local musicians helped out with the recording of the album as well.

Before they ever got to the recording aspect of the album, it needed to be written. Ford said she and Ramsay spent most of 1998 writing their songs, and then they started recording in March. The album was mastered in May, and it is currently on the shelves of stores like Borders Books in Braintree and Hyannis, Tower Records in Boston, and also Newbury Comics in Braintree. The album is also for sale on Ford's website and on Amazon.com as well.

Ford and Ramsay have been promoting their album through local venues and shows in other Massachusetts towns as well. They have added an extra musician for their live shows, local guitarist Dan Feeley, who plays and does some vocals as well.

"It's been really cool having him play with us," Ford said of Feeley. She added there is a chance Feeley may play on Ford's next CD, which is in the works right now.

"We're just letting it develop," Ford said. "We're already gigging our new material, but we're trying to concentrate on promoting 'The Quiet House' right now. We're definitely planning the new album though right now, and in fact, we're actually holding ourselves back from running to the studio and recording new material."

But Ford said she and Ramsay are having no trouble promoting the current album. She said 11 of the album's 13 songs are already getting radio time on a number of different stations such as WATD in Marshfield, WUMB in Boston, and a number of other stations.

Ford said she and Ramsay are also being featured on an upcoming sampler CD which also features big name musicians like U2, Beck, and Gloria Estefan.

Ford's album is also getting a lot of attention because a part of the proceeds from it are being donated to the American Lung Association and also to the Literacy Volunteers of America.

"We really feel like we need to make contributions to both organizations," she said. "They both do great work."

Ford and Ramsay are satisfied with being able to contribute to not only the music industry, but to organizations trying to make a difference in the world as well.

And right now, they will be able to concentrate on spreading their music around the South Shore. Their upcoming gigs include one at the New Song Folk Club in Weymouth on June 23, a concert on Marshfield's town green on July 23, Starbucks in Hingham on July 9, and even a gig outside in downtown Quincy on July 21.

"I think that if people can feel connected to a piece of music, it's good," she said. "If someone can listen to a song, and find a piece of themselves in it, it's well worth it."

Extraordinary $700 million development features four golf courses

By Marilyn Jackson

It's difficult describing The Pinehills in Plymouth without using superlatives. However, the vision of the developers of The Pinehills speaks to the special trust they feel has been bestowed upon them as they create a one of-a-kind community on more than 3,000 acres of pristine Plymouth woodlands.

The development is just eight miles north of Cape Cod and 45 minutes south of Boston. Shaping a master plan for the land, once intended to be the site of Digital Equipment Corp.'s world headquarters, has been an extraordinary process, including years of public review and several town meeting votes to provide the appropriate zoning for such a unique property.

The developer, Pine Hills LLC, is a partnership of The Green Companies, New England Development and Wallace Associates. Their plan, which will take between 10 and 15 years to complete at a cost in excess of $700 million, calls for setting aside 2,000 acres of open space and recreation land, with up to four golf courses, building more than 2,800 residences in a variety of neighborhoods, and constructing a 103-acre village green for business and retail.

Two 18-hole championship golf courses presently are under construction. One, designed by world-renowned Rees Jones, is scheduled to open in mid-spring next year. Another, developed by the Jack Nicklaus Design Company, will follow. Paving for the main roadway, Stonebridge Road, will begin in a few weeks, according to Nancy Hardaway, director of sales and marketing for The Pinehills.

"To find land this close to Boston that has been untouched by time and development is truly remarkable."
Peter Adrian Thomas

"Due to the permitting delays and appeals, The Pinehills has not been marketed," she said. In fact, Plymouth will convene another town meeting June 7 to amend the underlying zoning for the land.

"This is a very important town meeting," said Hardaway. "It's a key in the long-term expectations of people like Marriott."

More than two years ago, a division of Marriott Hotels agreed to open a 250-room resort with a large conference center on the site, targeting a construction start in 1998 with plans to open in 1999. And while formal marketing has not occurred, The Pinehills is hoping to officially open this summer, pending the successful outcome of one final permitting appeal and favorable action at the special town meeting.

Meanwhile, Kistler & Knapp Builders Inc. of Acton, working in tandem with architect Peter Adrian Thomas, AIA, of the Mount Vernon Group Inc. in Stoneham, has agreed to partner with Pine Hills LLC to build up to seven luxury homes in one of the most prestigious neighborhoods within The Pinehills. Called Stone's Throw, this area lies between the first and nine holes of the Rees Jones golf course.

"All have great views — golf views, the horizon and a view of the Pine Hills themselves," said Hardaway. "To find land this close to Boston that has been untouched by time and development is truly remarkable," Thomas stated.

"All have great views — golf views, the horizon and a view of the Pine Hills themselves."
Nancy Hardaway

"Kettles and kames (left by glaciers) add drama to the topography, and careful siting has ensured the greatest view potential of the Atlantic, the fairways, the woodland hills and secluded valleys."

"What's most exciting to me, besides this large nice parcel to be utilized in an interesting way," said Dennis Kistler, president of Kistler & Knapp, "is the personality, the sensitivity and the creativity of the managing company, Tony Green and his whole team. I hadn't worked with The Green Company before."

Exit Realty expands to South Shore

Tami Bonnell, the regional owner of Exit Realty of New England, announces the opening of its seventh office in New England. Owners Alan Kosinski and Christopher Florek will celebrate this expansion in an open house from 5 to 10 p.m. Wednesday, June 7. "We are extending an invitation to all residents and real estate professionals to join us for some food and fun,' said Florek. "Of course, there will be a number of special prizes including the giveaway of a 27-inch TV," he added. The chief executive officer of the Exit Realty Group from Canada, Steve Morris, will be attending along with other dignitaries.

Exit Realty is a four-year-old Canadian-based real estate company that offers its associates the opportunity to earn higher than industry average commission in addition to a pension when they retire. Alan Kosinski has been in the real estate industry for move than 18 years. He is a real estate Broker, consultant and investor. Christopher Florek, a young entrepreneur, has been involved in real estate for more than three years.

A 'standard' purchase and sale should never be standard

By Anthony Summers

Let the seller beware! The sellers of a home in Burlington thought their responsibilities ended at the closing, but in the case of Brennan v. Surette, the house came back to haunt them when the buyers sued the sellers for fraudulent misrepresentation and deceit.

Background

The Surettes (the sellers, defendants), offered their home for sale in the summer of 1993. Surette's broker provided them with a form to complete entitled, "Seller's Description of Property." One of Surette's comments stated that settling cracks were repaired. Brennan (the buyer, plaintiff) inquired about the cracks, and Surette's response was that the cracks had been repaired.

The parties entered into and executed a standard (uh oh!) purchase and sale agreement with the seller's description form attached. The standard form (oh really?) P&S gave the buyers the right to inspect the house, but they chose not to. In December of 1993, the closing occurred.

We all know what happened next! Yes, the cracks came back, bigger and better than ever, crowned with a major gap in the foundation. Faced with no other alternative (yes, you're right), the Brennans sued for deceit and fraudulent misrepresentation.

Anthony Summers

Discussion

In its review of the law, the court pointed out that: The sellers do not owe any fiduciary duty to the buyers — and do not have any duty to disclose every defect in the property of which they had knowledge. "However, where a seller provides some information about some particular topic, the seller is bound to disclose all material facts on the topic which are within their knowledge."

In a deceit action, the plaintiff must prove "that the defendant made a false representation of a material fact with knowledge of its falsity for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to act thereon and that the plaintiff relied upon the representation as true and acted upon it to his damages.

Decision

Finding no foundation for the crack complaint, the court found for the sellers. The sellers made no false statement and further disclosed everything they were aware of.

Legal advice

Sellers, buyers: There is no such thing as a "Standard Purchase and Sale." The sellers could have avoided this problem had they only used an experienced real estate attorney.

Area residents complete real estate course

Several area residents recently completed a five-week course on the fundamentals of real estate sales at the Conway Country School of Real Estate.

Graduates included Peggy Sue Henderson, Susan MacKinnon and Judith A. Bouchard of Marshfield; Paul Barry of Pembroke; and Juliette A. Egan of Weymouth.

Those interested in becoming licensed real estate agents can take the 25 hours of coursework to meet the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' requirements prior to taking the salesperson's licensing exam.

Students of the Conway Country School of Real Estate also have access to professional career counseling to discuss joining the Conway sales team, although enrolling in the prelicensing class does not obligate students to work for Conway.

Tuition is $180 and the classes are held at the Hanover Campus (at the intersection of Routes 53 and 139) Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9:30 p.m. The next class starts July 11 and runs through Aug. 10. For more information on this or future license courses, call (781) 826-0088.

The Conway Country School of Real Estate is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co., with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

IN BRIEF

New consumer brochures for homebuyers and owners available

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) and the office of Attorney General Thomas Reilly have produced an informative brochure for real estate professionals to provide to buyers and sellers detailing Title 5 regulations of the Massachusetts Environmental Code.

The newly released Title 5 brochure entitled, "Facts for Consumers: Title 5 Septic System Regulations" provides information to homebuyers and sellers of the inspection upon transfer obligations mandated for all on-site sewage disposal systems under the Title 5 regulations.

It details when an inspection is necessary and under what conditions it is not, and notes some tell-tale signs of conditions under which an inspection may fail.

Inspector obligations are discussed as well as approximate costs for the inspection and repairs or upgrades that may be necessary.

To finance the cost of the repair or upgrade, eligible towns have betterment funds available, while home improvement loans are available through the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency, and the U.S. Rural Housing Service offers low-interest loans. Information on the state's Title 5 Tax Credit also is provided.

Two other consumer brochures recently produced cooperatively by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors and Massachusetts Office of Consumer Affairs include "A Consumer Guide to Buying & Selling a Home in Massachusetts" and "A Consumer Guide to Landlord Rights and Responsibilities."

The 12-page brochure on buying and selling a home explains agency relationships and the role and duties of the real estate agent, buyer's and seller's rights and responsibilities, and the process by which homes are marketed and sold.

The pamphlet on landlord rights is 24 pages and offers insight on finding a good tenant, the legalities for collecting and handling the security deposit and last month's rent, the eviction process, and other duties and remedies of the landlord.

The Title 5 and the buying/selling brochures are available in packages of 100 for $25, plus tax and shipping. The Guide to Landlord Rights and Responsibilities is available in packages of 100 for $40 plus tax and shipping. Real estate agents may call the MAR Bookstore at 781/890-3700 to place an order.

Seminar available for first-time homebuyers

Tiger Home Inspection will offer a "First Time Homebuyer" seminar Saturday, June 3, at Eastern Nazarene College, 23 E. Elm Ave., Quincy, from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

There is no cost to attend the seminar. However, space is limited, and is on a first-come, first-serve basis. To reserve a seat, please call Tiger Home Inspection at 1-800-628-4437.

The seminar is designed to help first-time homebuyers understand what to look for when purchasing a home. Topics to be covered include (1) Average life expectancy of major components in a home, including refrigerator, furnace, gutters; (2) What a home inspection will tell about the condition of the property you are buying; (3) Buyers' and sellers' responsibilities during a transaction; and (4) Common household repairs.

"Buying a house is an expensive investment. A home inspection provides an accurate, realistic assessment of that property's condition so that the homebuyer can make an informed decision. We don't advise clients as to whether they should purchase a property, but we do provide them with a report that helps them make an informed decision," said Joseph Rizzo, CEO of Tiger Home Inspection.

He continued, "We are finding that both first-time and repeat home buyers are opting for home inspections in order to get a complete, clear picture of the status of the property they are thinking of purchasing."

Tiger Home Inspection is one of the largest inspection companies in the Northeast, employing more than 30 full-time inspectors and 10 marketing representatives throughout Eastern Massachusetts, Rhode Island and southern New Hampshire. The company conducted more than 18,000 inspections last year. Tiger Home Inspection provides a full range of inspections including VA and FHA. In addition, testing is available for RADON, water quality and quantity, Title 5 (septic systems), and detecting the presence of wood-boring insects.

The firm maintains central offices at 969 Washington St., Braintree, MA 02184. Individual home inspectors maintain home-offices throughout the New England region. For additional information on services provided by Tiger Home Inspection, call 1-800-628-4437.

Saber is a big goofy boy who loves everyone. He is a handsome, unusual looking dog who might be a Plott Hound/shepherd mix. What's a Plott Hound? It's a fairly rare breed of scent hounds developed in the Smoky Mountains of North Carolina and described in the Atlas of Dog Breeds of the World as "hounds of fine nose and beautiful voice that are easily trained." Saber needs a little training so he can learn to control his enthusiasm for life. He's currently receiving obedience training from a professional trainer and responding well. Saber would do well with a family with older children. (He's a little too big and energetic right now for small kids!)

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Small Time Crooks (C+)

Has it really been 31 years since "Take the Money and Run," the first movie Woody Allen wrote, directed and starred in? That one, beginning the string of movies that Woodyologists refer to as the "funny films period," had our hero as an inept bank robber, a part he recapitulates in "Small Time Crooks." In a sense, happily, this slight, not quite first-rate Allen movie is a joyful return to those more innocent days and less angst-ridden films that overlook our guy in the "serious films period" that followed. But Allen's last film before this one, "Sweet and Lowdown," had real verve, a stunning starring performance by Sean Penn, musical vibrancy and consummate skill in the making of it. "Small Time Crooks" looks to have been tossed together - even tossed-together Woody Allen has its charms - and, as is so often the case with his films, it simply ends, petering out with a sit-commish gag, terminating without any real flourish.

Woody is Ray Winkler, a dishwasher recently released from prison, living with his wife, Frenchy (Tracey Ullmann), a former exotic dancer, and drawn now to a foolproof plan to rob a bank by renting a vacant shop, tunneling from it underneath the adjacent clothing store and into the bank's vault, becoming rich into the bargain. His compatriots in this fool's errand (Michael Rapaport, Tony Darrow and Jon Lovitz) are as naÖve as he, though one has the foresight to remind an obstinate Ray that his prison nickname, "Brain," was intended as irony, not as a compliment. The space is rented, the tunneling begins, and the boys hit a water main and the plot is waterlogged. Meanwhile, to provide a front for the chicanery below, Frenchy starts selling cookies in the storefront, aided by her dimwitted cousin May (Elaine May, in the most winning performance in the movie). Unintended consequence: The cookies sell like, well, cookies, and suddenly the Winklers are franchising and rich.

Tracey Ullman takes a call at the wrong time.

This begins the second half of the movie, in which the nouveau riches Winklers indulge a taste for garishness, like a gold harp in the livingroom, that is the funniest visual ingredient in the movie. The place is a horror. Frenchy wants to get culture, so she hires a smooth-talking art dealer (Hugh Grant) to tutor her in the finer things, while Ray just wants to keep his humble life, watch a game on the tube and down a brewski or two. So, while Ray is pining for the old days, riches having failed to make him happy, Frenchy yearns for Improvement, with a capitol I, and when things begin to unravel, and cleverer crooks undermine the Winklers' fortune, Ray goes back to his old ways and comes up with another foolproof scheme to success, this time involving a necklace owned by a society matron (Elaine Stritch, who plays a nastier version of this in the execrable "Screwed"). To my mind, there's no such thing as a terrible Woody Allen movie. I just wish this one were funnier.

Written and directed by Woody Allen.

Mission: Impossible 2 (C)

The Bondification of the "Mission: Impossible" heroics continues, with, this time, a comprehensible plot - the first screen incarnation in 1996 was befuddling - and even more splash, oomph and devastation, courtesy director John Woo, known (and by some loved) for his pyrotechnics and general adoration of cinema mayhem. Nothing in this movie would seem out of place were Pierce Brosnan, as 007, Bond, James Bond, to be doing it. The TV series' accentuation of brilliant charades and con games to solve their appointed missions has been replaced by a fascination, veering on worship, for gadgets and snazzy things.

For no apparent reason other than to ratchet up the movie's budget and show what can be done, we get, early on, a chase and chicken-run down a winding mountain highway between our hero's Porsche and a lady's Audi, which ends in her vehicle smashed to smithereens, his damaged and their attraction to each other sealed. This follows hard upon a little bit of larceny in Seville, Spain, in which our guy, Ethan Hunt (Tom Cruise) keeps a jewel thief, Nyah Hall (Thandie Newton), from completing her task. This comes after the movie's opening, in which a bad guy wearing a Tom Cruise mask does terrible things to a plane-load of people, steals an important item and exits safely with his companions while the plane crashes into a mountain. And that is followed by a scene showing Hunt climbing a mountain and being reached, via helicopter and mini-rocket, by his boss (an uncredited Anthony Hopkins) and given his assignment.

Which is: Get back that important thing, which turns out to be Chimera, a new biologically engineered virus, and the antidote to it as well. And there's the movie: Cruise, his newly elongated locks blowing in the wind, aided by his loyal technical genius (Vingh Rhames) and a pilot, periodically alongside Newton - who shows little of her acting skills here and looks anorexic and miserable in the role, no matter how hard she tries to come up with a smile - playing cat and mouse with the villain, Sean Ambrose (Dougray Scott, who was Prince Charming in "Ever After" and looked much less menacing there).

The dialogue is risible, ponderously portentous when not being inappropriately flippant - at one point the villain screams, "I want stock! Stock options to be precise!" - and we're overloaded with those latex masks and deafened by a bombastic score and lulled now and then into torpor as hero and vile guys exchange gunfire with weapons seemingly inexhaustibly supplied with ammunition. Woo's trademark white doves are on hand - a preview audience giggled appreciatively - as are his (and the makers of Bond movies) affection for impossible (well, implausible) acrobatics and derring-do. A good time is had by all, to be sure, even if it's one made possible owing to stupefyingly cliched gimmicks. In "M:I-3" Cruise will be bald and his nemesis will be played by Stone Cold Steve Austin.

Private group to spearhead village plans

Selectmen process will be public

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The revitalization of Cohasset Village is starting to slowly creak forward.

A newly-formed non-profit, private entity, the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, has taken the reins of the project and will be paying the lion's share of the creation of redesign plans for the village. Dean Rizzo, the former chairman of the Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF), resigned last week, and will also be leaving his job at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce to become the executive director of the corporation.

The creation of the corporation was backed mainly by Peter Roy, owner of the Atlantica and Kimballs-by-the-Sea, and Gerde Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn.

"It was formed as an independent entity that could carry the initiative along quicker than it would with the limited resources of Cohasset," said Rizzo, adding that its intentions are purely to help the town along with its goal of a redesigned village.

"By having an office, it will allow people to come and see what's going on, or see the plans and give us their input."
— Dean Rizzo of the Cohasset Revitalization Corp.

But some are worried that, by having a private entity overseeing the design of the village, it will become a "closed-door" process; that decisions will be made without public involvement. Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan expressed concern at Tuesday's meeting about the loss of

Fall claims life of Cohasset woman

Loved hiking, mountain climbing

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

A memorial service will be held June 19 at First Parish Church to remember the life of a Cohasset woman who died doing what she loved.

Diana Bradford Kornet, 29, an avid outdoorswoman — the daughter of Diana and John Kornet of Gammons Road — died Sunday morning when she slipped and fell from the summit of Mount Hood in Oregon.

Though the family had always been active sailors, Kornet's mother said Diana really took a shine to hiking while a student at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire. She became very active in the college's outdoors club and developed interests in scuba diving and white-water rafting, as well as hiking and mountain climbing.

"She had a wonderful sense of humor and always had a smile on her face."
— Diana D. Kornet

"She cared very much about the planet," said Kornet about her daughter. "She was a member of the Sierra Club, was very into organic food. She had become a vegetarian years ago, and was very much into recycling and population control."

The Kornets moved to Cohasset in 1976, and Diana graduated from Milton Academy in 1989. She majored in biology, with a certificate in environmental studies while at Dartmouth, from which she matriculated in 1993. She moved to California after graduating and taught at the Menlo School, and then at the Quiet train may mean four-quad crossing gates

But technology does not have go-ahead

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The jury is still out on four-quadrant gates at railroad crossings, MBTA senior project coordinator Kevin Dasey told Cohasset officials this week.

That means if the gate design doesn't pass muster with federal regulators then Cohasset grade crossings will have protective berms instead. Otherwise, train whistles that must start sounding one-quarter mile before reaching a crossing — under the current two-quadrant gate system — would blare throughout town whenever the train came through. That would add up 12 times in the morning and 12 at night, and several times in-between as the Greenbush train travels through town.

Construction on the Greenbush line, the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad project, could start in 2002, with service beginning in 2005, officials say.

Four-quadrant gates involve gates closing in both lanes on both sides of the tracks, so a vehicle cannot scoot around the gate in a race to beat the train. The use of those gates would eliminate the need for warning whistles.

"Imagine someone sitting in a queue on the tracks and the gates come down. The four-quad gate may be a barrier enough to cause someone to freeze in place."
— Kevin Dasey, MBTA

But there are safety concerns that railroad officials are not comfortable with, Dasey explained. They are worried that the driver of a car trapped between the gates might panic and not realize he can drive right through the gates to clear the tracks.

"There is a feeling among railroad operators that four-quads might be traps," he said. "Imagine someone sitting in a queue on the tracks and the gates come down. The four-quad gate may be a barrier enough to cause someone to freeze in place."

Sensors, which can be installed to avoid such a scenario, are tricky, he said. They are difficult to maintain and do not stand up to plowing too well.

The alternative is installing berms — that look like median strips and would be 100-feet long and four-to-six feet wide in the center of the street on each side of the grade crossing. Like the four-quad gates, berms would prevent drivers from scooting around a close gate to beat a train.

Dasey stressed that whatever happens with the four-quadrant gates, Cohasset does not want horns.

"The trains sound two long, one short and two long at about 120 decibels," he said. "It's loud as hell."

He said Cohasset and other Greenbush towns might have Hingham to thank for being whistle-free.

Hedlund's train effort knocked

Challengers won't take stance on Greenbush line

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The two Democratic challengers for Republican Sen. Robert Hedlund's seat on Beacon Hill criticized the four-term senator's effectiveness in dealing with the controversial restoration of the Greenbush rail line.

Both James Cantwell and Ted LeClair said in separate interviews that Hedlund's recent attempt in forcing a vote on the floor of the Senate was too little, too late and that the communities affected by the restoration of the line need someone "more effective" on Beacon Hill.

"The efforts by the incumbent have neither persuaded the governor not to go forward, nor improved our ability to defend ourselves," said Cantwell, a former Marshfield selectman who now resides in Weymouth.

LeClair, a Marshfield businessman, said that Hedlund has shown "an inability to deal" with those in charge of the project's future.

The comments come on the heels of Hedlund forcing a vote in the Senate that would have effectively made it illegal to build a diesel-engined train system on the Greenbush right-of-way. Hedlund cited a hefty pricetag that he says will reach more than $860 million, when principal and interest are factored in. Though Hedlund was only able to muster 11 votes, including four Democrats, he was pleased at the results. "I'm not naming names, but members of the leadership said I was right on the merits of the issue," he said, adding that unlike his two rivals, he is not ready to throw in the towel on the fight against the project.

"Key people like the transportation secretary are obviously hell-bent on getting this done, but I've got key legislative people questioning whether this will actually happen." He also criticized the Democratic challengers for not taking a clear stance on the issue. "If the candidates want the public trust, they should provide answers...It's important for voters to know where they stand on an issue."

But both Democratic candidates refuse to be pigeonholed into choos-

Cemetery update

The board of health voted to approve plans for an expansion of Woodside Cemetery this week.

"We're here because state law says we must have board of health approval," said Glenn Pratt, chairman of the cemetery committee.

The expansion on two acres would involve installation of walls for urns and about 600 graves.

The board of health said it would send a copy of its approval in writing to the selectmen.

Sharing plans

Kevin Dasey, MBTA project coordinator with the Greenbush train project, told town officials this week that the T would be happy to make a presentation to the planning board about the railroad project but would not enter into the site plan process.

"It's okay to share it but we won't take an ultimatum from the planning board," Dasey said.

Greenbush Mitigation Committee chairman Tom Gruber said he hoped that a dialog between the MBTA and planning board might be possible.

New firehouse

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln told Kevin Dasey, MBTA project coordinator for Greenbush, that the town needs another fire station on the other side of the railroad tracks for safety reasons. Lincoln is worried that delays caused by trains at grade crossings could add precious time to emergency calls. But Dasey said other towns where the train has been restored have not had a problem. Although Hingham and Scituate will have stations on both sides of the tracks, Bridgewater and Middleboro only have one station, he said. Dasey said with the number of train trips and times of emergency runs, there would be little conflict. Nevertheless, Lincoln said he address the issue at an upcoming meeting with Plymouth County fire chiefs to get their input.

No reserved parking

Kevin Dasey, MBTA project coordinator for Greenbush, said the T cannot allow part of the Cohasset train station parking lot to be reserved for Cohasset residents only. He explained that some towns with the train have their own land next to the train station that is used for residents only parking.

The train station is slated for the Graham Waste Recycling site (former Winter Garden Skating Rink) off Rte. 3A. Dasey said parking lots on the Plymouth and Middleboro lines have filled up because of the popularity of the train and the fact that fewer people walk to or are dropped off at the stations than the T anticipated.

Condolences offered to former selectman

In light of the tragic death of Diana B. Kornet, daughter of former Cohasset Selectman Diana D. Kornet, Tom Callahan, chairman of the current board, started Tuesday night's meeting by expressing the board's sorrow. "On behalf of the board of selectmen, I would like to offer our condolences for the loss of their daughter," he said.

Town counsel policy

Selectmen will discuss the adoption of a new policy for use of town counsel at their next meeting, June 20. The draft was submitted to all town departments, boards, committees and commissions, on May 25, for comments.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the change in policy, which stems from a drain on the budget due to the large amount of litigation the town currently faces, would allow the town to "get a better handle," on the town's litigation bills. The change would give the town manager more oversight in use of town counsel, and require town counsel to get his approval to exceed whatever budget was established for a particular matter.

In last night's meeting, Selectman Ronnie McMorris questioned the need for a new town counsel policy. She suggested more stringent control and enforcement of the current policy.

However, chairman Tom Callahan said that if the current policy worked, the town wouldn't face the fiscal difficulties it does.

Liquor license

The town had originally scheduled to hold a liquor license hearing, regarding an alleged violation at Village Wine and Spirits, at Tuesday's meeting, but according to Town Manager Mark Haddad, store owner Cliff Chase was not able to attend the meeting and it was rescheduled for June 20.

Police said the alleged violation occurred at about 8 p.m. May 20, when on routine patrol an officer saw two minors exit the wine store with a 12-pack of beer in hand and drive away. The officer stopped the teenagers near Border Street and Parker Avenue, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. One fled and was later apprehended in Scituate.

Water testing

The board of health said this week it would send a letter to the water commission encouraging the commission to conduct addition testing as soon as possible. A recent round of tests revealed high levels of Total Trihalomethane, a potential carcinogen. The chemical is a byproduct of the chlorination process. The state Department of Environmental Protection assured Cohasset that the results are not unusual because the tests were performed at end points of the water system where water is not circulating freely.

At its meeting this week, the health board was not alarmed but wanted more tests conducted so any problems could be ruled out.

"One test does not make a study," health board member Robin Lawrence said.

Dr. Joseph Godzik said that additional tests should come from sampling points more representative of where water is coming from that people are actually drinking.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday that he was assured by Water Commissioner John McNabb that there is no problem with the town's water supply. Haddad said that he is going to invite McNabb to the next selectmen's meeting on June 20 to discuss the issue further.

Parade turnout

Selectman Ronnie McMorris took advantage of her comment period in Tuesday night's meeting to praise the residents of Cohasset for their turnout to last Monday's Memorial Day celebration. "It was a great tribute to our veterans and I'm proud of the community," she said..

Merle Brown also reminded those at the Juen 6 meeting that June 6, was the 56th Anniversary of D-Day, the massive allied invasion of Normandy. He pointed out that 35 people from one town in Virginia died during the operation.

Rough welcome back for Haddad

Tuesday marked the first day back on the job in more than a week, for Town Manager Mark Haddad, who had been impaneled on a jury in Brockton District Court.

However, his welcome back to the town's activities hit a rough spot during the public comment period in Tuesday night's Selectmen's meeting. A local resident use the public comment period to question Haddad about the condition of the streets on Old Pasture Road which were dug up for the sewer work. But when Haddad informed the resident that it was the sewer commission's job to oversee the repaving of the roads, not his, the criticized the town's handling of the problem and suggested that Haddad was "overpaid."

The Board then explained that they have made numerous attempts to get the repaving process begun, but the explanation was not sufficient for the resident who left the meeting calling the board, "a bunch of apple-knockers."

Mitigation committee presents wish-list to selectmen

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Town officials are rolling up their shirtsleeves and preparing to go head-to-head with MBTA officials to work out a sufficient mitigation package for Cohasset when the Greenbush commuter-rail line starts rolling through the town.

On Monday, the Cohasset Mitigation Committee met with MBTA official Kevin Dasey, and presented him with a 26-item wish-list. The MBTA had offered a six-item list a month ago, including a historic preservation fund of $100,000. Hingham and the MBTA recently agreed to a fund of $1.3 million.

Other items offered in the MBTA list were:

an up-grade of the James Brook watershed from Strawberry Parfait to Jacobs Meadow.

a new well on Sohier Street a coordinated traffic light at the Forest, North Main and King Street intersections to prevent traffic from backing up over the tracks an all-season buffer between the new track and station and the Woodside Cemetery

On Tuesday, the committee met with selectmen to go over the town's 26-item list and derive a plan of attack. Among the items was a $2.1 million historic preservation fund. Committee chairman Tom Gruber said the fund number was drawn from a study that said houses within 600-700 feet of a commuter rail line lose approximately 10 percent of their value. Gruber said that 70 parcels of property are within those parameters and when multiplied by the average cost of a house in Cohasset, which he said was at least $300,000, and multiplied by a 10 percent decrease in property value, the amount of money lost came to $2.1 million.

Other items on the town's list include:

building of an access road to Sesito Lane and/or Castle Road, depending on which private way is closed.

four quadrant crossing gates throughout the town rebuild the town parking lot including the replacement of spaces lost to train-related design.

vibration mitigation for ABB Optical on Ripley Road

the building of an emergency fire station on west side of tracks. Cohasset is currently the only town on the Greenbush line without a fire station on both sides of the tracks.

design of the Pleasant Street crossing and Smith Place closure so to not disrupt area businesses solve potential flood problems from James Brook to Elms Meadow due to tracks the possibility of including space for resident parking with the taking of land for the Cohasset station parking lot require the MBTA to submit the station and general right-of-way design plans to the town's planning board for site review, and to ensure proper emergency vehicle access a review of the passing track at Sohier Street and King Street overhead (cantilever) and audible warning signals at crossings an overall general review of the Pond and Spring Street crossing plans new hydrant on the west side of Sesito Lane. The committee said that firefighters would not be able to lay hoses across tracks because as Haddad put it, "the hoses aren't train proof."

review of the drainage calculations for North Main Street

make sure MBTA agrees to abide by town construction laws

location of wetland replication area commitment to continued discussion of flood and drainage impact of project, as well as traffic impact

Selectman response to the list was favorable calling the list "pretty comprehensive." The board and mitigation committee agreed to meet soon in executive session to discuss negotiation strategies so that discussions with the MBTA could begin as soon as possible.

Selectmen also agreed with the committee that the MBTA purchase of the Cohasset owned-right-of-way should not be included in the mitigation list, because the property's purchase cost could interfere with the town getting additional mitigation items. The board said it will also discuss negotiation strategy on the purchase cost of the right-of-way in an executive session.

Quiet train means four-quad gates

"We were told we'd never get a permit in Hingham because of adverse noise impact to the historic district," Dasey said.

One Cohasset crossing is likely to get berms regardless of what federal regulators decide. The crossing on North Main Street near the golf club is on a curve making the use of four-quadrant gates there unlikely, Dasey said. The berms would have posts with reflectors to make sure they are visible to motorists at night.

Cohasset officials told Dasey they didn't want berms at crossings in town if at all possible. Installing berms would also involve more land taking.

"We hear you loud and clear," Dasey said. "You want four-quad gates and we want to be 100 percent up front and tell you we're dealing with draft regulations and our railroad people don't want to make a recommendation until they know what those regulations are."

Dasey said a decision on four-quad gates would probably occur in six to nine months which is about the time that the MBTA expects to be into its final design phase with the Greenbush project.

Cohasset ready to send off Class of 2000

59 to graduate Sunday

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset High School's commencement exercises on Sunday will be a send-off in more ways than one. The ceremony, to be held at the South Shore Music Circus at 1:30 p.m., will mark both the end and the beginning for the 59-member senior class — the end of their time as students and the beginning of the bright future they can look forward to.

But it will also mark the beginning and end for Principal Curtis Collins, who will retire at the end of the school year after five years at the helm of the high school.

"This is a great group of kids to go out with," said Collins. "That's been the one thing about this group. They are, without a doubt, the nicest group of kids that we have had in many years."

This year's class is the smallest there has been in a number of years, and, because of the recent period of growth the town is experiencing at the lower grade levels, Collins doesn't expect there to be a class this small again "for many years to come."

He said that he was admired how close the class has been, partially due to the size. "you never get one, you always get 12," he said.

Ed Leonard, a guidance counselor at the high school, has come full circle with the Class of 2000. Leonard formerly was at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools and remembers a number of the seniors from back when. He said that things still have not changed from 12 years ago.

"I've had elementary school teachers ask when the graduation ceremony is, saying they didn't want to miss it," he said.

"This is a great group of kids to go out with."
— Curtis Collins

Class president Jen Chastain said the class has always been tight knit.

"We've always been together and have always grown up together and now we're going our own ways," she said. "College will be so much bigger and different."

And although the class has always been close, with the end of their high school days approaching, Chastain, who will attend Trinity College in the fall, says that the class is growing even more close.

She credits the senior class show, which was a takeoff of "Saturday Night Live" and featured a number of skits and musical performances by seniors, and the class's senior trip to Disney World in May, with helping to tighten the bonds.

Despite its size, this year's group of graduates has had its share of successes. More than 95 percent of the graduates will attend a four-year college in the fall, and 22 students will receive honors from the National Honor Society at the ceremony. Talent moving on when diplomas are handed out include: All-State musicians Elizabeth Hassan and Khalil Madyun. The drama department, which turned in a number of tremendous performances, will lose its student director, Grace Gardner. And the athletic department will miss a talented group that includes several South Shore League All-Stars.

Chastain, Valedictorian Stefan Vanderweil and salutatorian Brian Tracy are scheduled to speak at Sunday's ceremony. Dr. Edward Malvey, superintendent of Cohasset Public schools is expected to make a few remarks before presenting the class for graduation.

Last Thursday night, the seniors in their formal wear danced the night away at their senior prom held at the Longwharf Marriott in Boston. "It was fabulous," said Collins.

Last night (Wednesday), members of the class were honored at the annual awards night, which featured the dispersement of senior awards and scholarships.

Nor'Easter sends tree through roof

The unusual spring Nor'Easter that swept through the area last night did its share of damage in Cohasset, sending trees onto two houses, with one of those houses suffering significant damage.

Just after midnight last night, Cohasset police received a call from 505 Chief Justice Cushing Highway reporting a tree had crashed through the roof.

"It shook the whole house," said Marjorie Ritter, 73, who was sleeping in the house at the time, which she shares with her daughter and son-in-law.

Ritter said the tree crashed through the roof into the front wall, breaking a door and a window and that another piece of the tree went out the back of the house and broke the deck.

According to Ritter, her daughter, Darleen Gerrard, called the fire department, not knowing if any wires had come down along with the tree.

Firefighters were able to pull tarps over the roof of the house and prevent anymore rain from coming in, but the tree remains, as the Mariner went to press. "They did such a good job," said Ritter of the fire department's efforts.

A tree also was reported to have fallen on a house on Holly Lane but no one was available to comment.

Cohasset police also received calls of trees down on Pleasant Street, Howe Road, Jeruselum Road and Main Street, along with many reports of downed branches and wires throughout the town, as well as small power outages.

AROUND TOWN

MISSING PERSONS

Help is needed to all our readers! The CHS Class of 1980 is having its 20th class reunion on July 8 at the Red Lion Inn! It sounds like it will be a lot of fun for all. What is needed however, is any information on the whereabouts, addresses or phone numbers on some former classmates.

They are: Raymond Brown, AnnMarie Gilman, Peter Colletta, Lenore Cossart, Heather Briggs, Jack Maclean, Scott Murphy, Paul Stockbridge, Linda Ryan, Chris Sieve, Julie Vida, and Valerie Whitney. If anyone has any information on these people, please call Lynne (O'Toole) Durkin at 781-383-2732.

COLLEGE GRAD

Once again, we have many, wonderful students to congratulate in this weeks column! On May 22, Katie Medinger of 111 Pond St., graduated from the Wallace E. Carroll School of Management at Boston College! Katie received a BS in marketing cum laude. Great Job, Katie!

BC HONORS

Some other news from Boston College came my way from the Nicynski family of Cohasset. Their son, Ron, who is a 1999 CHS graduate, just completed his second semester at Boston College with a GPA of 3.8! This earned him First Honors and a spot on the Deans List! Congratulations Ron!

DEAN'S LIST

I also received a note that Trevor Cook, a junior at Salem State College has been named to the Spring 2000 Deans List. Good work, Trevor!

AWARD WINNER

Another top student from Cohasset is Chauncy D. Steele. Chauncy was awarded the Professor Alexander J. Cella Award from Suffolk University. This award is given annually to the student who has demonstrated commitment to, or excellence in, the field of administrative law. Our hats go off to you, Chauncy.

PHOTO EXHIBIT

We have one more Boston College graduate to report about! Liz Good, daughter of Bill and Betsy Good of Cohasset graduated on May 22 with a major in fine arts and English. Liz recently had her artwork displayed at the art center here in town for the national juried exhibition, Photography Now. Congratulations Liz, on being the chosen representative for this photo exhibit. The Goods were among the first families in town that I started babysitting for and Liz, I am really proud of your accomplishments! Fantastic work!

THANK YOU!

We received a phone call the other day from Cohasset' Jacqueline Moores, an older gal, who is legally blind. Jacqueline was recently shopping at Stop and Shop and as she said, received some much needed help from a "true Guardian Angel!" A young mother whose name she did not get, took the time to help Jacqueline get those hard to reach items throughout the store. Thank you so much for this great deed and everyone remember that no matter how rushed or stressed you may be, it takes only moments to help someone in need.

POSTER CONTEST

Wow, talk about some more great news, three Cohasset fourth-graders won recognition recently in the poster contest for World, No Tobacco Day. The theme was "Kids Come First, Wipe Out Second-Hand Smoke" which was sponsored by the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative. The first place winner was Alexandra Giroux, second place was Siobhan Fludder and third place went to Jackie Cahill. Congratulations kids on a job well done!

WHAT A CRUISE!

Had a wonderful call from Cohasset resident, Kathy Yeager. She and several of her friends got together and went on a 2 day "Cruise to Nowhere!" This was a "ladies only" trip and there names are, AnnMarie Lagrotteria, Patty Livingstone, Kathy, Mary Cease, Nancy Froio, Brenda Hill, Maureen Stebbins and Ann Czerkowski. Along with some more friends from Hingham, they danced, sang and partied and had a wonderful time. They wore t-shirts that were made ahead of time that read, "We're cruising to nowhere, so get out of our way!" Once back in town, they had a refreshing back to reality dip at Sandy Beach and then headed home! It sounded like a wonderful way to be with great friends and enjoy each other without the daily stuff that is in everyone's life.

OPRAH!

I had a fantastic time in the wonderful city of Chicago with my mom. The highlight for us was going to the Oprah Winfrey Show and actually talking with and holding hands with such a beautiful and talented woman. Our show aired last Friday and was a wonderful inspiration. I came home very tired as we did so much in such a short time but definitely refreshed! Happy Birthday, Mom!

Please keep the great news coming, many of you are using my email as well as sending your information. I am really enjoying this work of writing this column and want to give you as many ways possible to get me the news. Please look for forms around town soon to help make the whole process even easier. My e-mail address is jenpiep@yahoo.com. Items can also be sent the old-fashioned way to, Jen Piepenbrink, 622 CJC Highway, Cohasset.

'Today is the day everything changes'

145 graduate from NDA

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

From left, Lindsay Todd, Jenna Royer, Alannah DiBona and class president Meghan Corry of Cohasset, present the senior class gift to their school, an "electronic communicator" for the cafeteria.

Alison Berg of Cohasset accepts as special award as the first NDA graduate to go on to the US Naval Academy.

And with a shuffling side-step off the stage, it was all over, except for the cheering at the Notre Dame Academy Class of 2000 graduation Sunday.

As Laura Yilmaz, the final recipient of her diploma, soft-shoed her way off stage left, the class of 145 young women let out a cheer and began their final walk off the Hingham campus that had been their home for the past four years.

"Today is the day everything changes," said Lindsay Todd, class valedictorian and senior class treasurer in her address to her fellow graduates and their families and friends in attendance. "Today is the day we step off the sidewalk and venture out beyond," she said in reference to Shel Silverstein's children's poem "Where the Sidewalk Ends."

Moving into the unknown was the metaphor of the day as a standing-room only crowd gathered under a marine blue sky on a warm summer-like day to watch the graduation exercises.

Class Salutatorian Katey Weizel chose the book "Catcher in the Rye" to help illustrate her point. "I think nearly everyone had to admit that at certain times in her life, she's felt, like Holden [Caulfield, the book's protagonist], that it was just about killing her to have to grow up," she said. But she added that Holden's image of playing in a rye field and suddenly plummeting over a cliff into adulthood just doesn't hold true to her. "I personally can't feel any pit-of-the-stomach roller-coaster drop sensation, and I haven't seen any of us falling. It seems as though we're beginning to fly."

Following an invocation by Class vice-president Alannah DiBona and Weizel's speech, 11 Notre Dame students were honored for four years of achievement while at the school. Weizel was the recipient of the Religion Department Award; Courtney Murray, the Computer and Technology Department Award; Laura Yilmaz, the English Department Award; Nicole Gulla and Tyla Vercollone, the Fine Arts Department Awards for Art and Music, respectively; Lindsay Todd, the Mathematics Department Award; Carolyn Luanie, the Science Department Award, Jacquelyn McEttrick, the Social Studies Department Award; and Todd, Nicole Corvini and Virginia Sopyla were the recipients of the World Languages Award in Latin, French and Spanish, respectively.

The members of the Class of 2000 were the recipients of more than $7 million in scholarships and grants from colleges and corporate and community sponsors but perhaps none stood out more than the award given to Allison Berg of Cohasset. The National Honor Society member and swim team stand-out received her certificate of appointment to the US Naval Academy from John McDonald, the area coordinator of the Naval Academy. In his presentation, McDonald said that, to his knowledge, Berg was the first student from Notre Dame Academy to receive an appointment to Annapolis. Special recognition was also given to Rachel Smith, "the healthiest member of the class," according to Principal Sister Barbara Barry, on Smith's 12-year perfect attendance record.

Class President Meghan Corry, of Cohasset, presented the class gift of $2,300 — which Todd said has been safe in her hands because of her "mother-bear protecting skills" — to be used for the purchase of a electronic communicator for the cafeteria.

Cornelia LaCambria, a member of the NDA Class of 1965, and now the headmaster at the Boston Latin School, told her new "fellow alumnae" that they are entering "the most exciting time of change in your lives."

"You are leaving the friendly confines of Notre Dame Academy to seek out the myriad careers which will be available to you in the 21st century ...many of which do not even exist today." LaCambria pointed to herself as an example saying that she is currently the headmaster at a school that didn't have a single female student or teacher when she graduated from NDA in 1965.

"What will happen to you between now and 2050, when you return as golden jubilarians? You need to look inside your own hearts and ask, where am I going? What will I be? How will my presence make this world a better place?" She emphasized making decisions based on dignity, civility, honesty, morality and holiness. "Keep your focus on what is good."

With those words, the 145 young women took their long-awaited walk across the stage, received their diploma and test tassel and began their real journey.

OPINION

A world of opportunity

It was with mixed feelings many of you began your senior year. For some, your final year of high school couldn't have come sooner. Many of you began the school year with varying degrees of excitement and may now dread leaving a familiar zone. Whatever your feelings, the school has provided you with basic tools to live and work within today's world. Some of you will try expanding these skills through college or training schools. There are those among you who will put these skills to work, or develop them within the military.

Whatever you decide, the world holds much promise for you. Unemployment is at a 30-year low. Technology advances thanks to the computer are revolutionizing the workplace. The information age it has created, is making the world a smaller place. The Internet allows a steady stream of ideas to be exchanged around the globe. As a result, cultural barriers are being penetrated at a dazzling pace.

These advances are allowing the world you live within to enjoy the peace and prosperity which global leaders have dreamed of. When you were born, the shadow of the Cold War loomed over the planet. Nuclear weapons were stockpiled by the U.S. and the former Soviet Union. The fear of a nuclear holocaust prompted many to speculate what "the day after" in the U.S. would be like.

These fears were eased several years after your birth when the Iron Curtain nations loosened themselves from the dying grasps of the Soviet Union. You probably don't remember that historic night in downtown Berlin when the Berlin Wall fell. None of these events probably seem significant to you. But the peace which has followed is allowing the global economy to expand within new frontiers while the information age continues unabated.

These events have created more opportunities for you now and within the years ahead. These choices also enable you to help make this world a better place.

Having a well-paying career is not an end within itself. The list of individuals which had fame, fortune, money, and good looks is endless. A visit to a homeless shelter often reveals people who had everything the world defines success by. The prisons also have residents who had a home in the 'burbs and two cars in the driveway. Whatever path you choose strive toward the values which can't be bought.

Shortly after the Civil War ended, Confederate Army general Robert E. Lee, became nearly penniless. The Confederacy's defeat left the southern states in an economic shambles. Lee had been stripped of his right to vote. Within weeks following the war, Lee was approached by a businessman who wanted to use his name for a new firm. Although the Confederacy had been defeated, Lee's name held high esteem among southerners. Lee did not drink alcohol or smoke, and was faithful toward his wife. He never believed in slavery and had freed several upon inheriting them from his father. Although Lee was poor he turned down the offer. "My name is not for sale," Lee flatly said. When Lee died in 1870, his funeral was well attended by former foes and friends alike. Nearly 130 years later, Lee remains admired by Americans from both northern and southern states.

During the next few years, many of you will be laying a foundation toward your career path. The decisions you make will define your name within the years ahead. The world offers a variety of career enticements which promise a shortcut toward fame and fortune. The goodies promised by these appeals usually promise luxuries which eventually breakdown and are placed in the landfill.

All too often these shortcuts fail to deliver the goods they promise. Don't sell yourselves short. There are no easy ways to success. Beware of the allure material goods seem to promise. Their pleasures are temporary. Approach your career path toward making the world around you a better place and you will receive pleasures which can't be bought.

The world has a lot of young adults between ages 18 to 24 with shattered dreams and unfulfilled promises. Many of them didn't have the privilege of receiving a fine education or comfortable home. There are also some who enjoyed these comforts but exchanged it for a life in the fast lane and are reaping its results. The Massachusetts Housing and Shelter Alliance recently reported the young adult population is the fastest growing homeless group. Many of these young people have struggled with chemical or substance addictions. Some of them have psychological issues their coping with. Many of these people are willing to receive help toward becoming responsible young adults. Consider their needs as you carve your career path.

The opportunities to serve and provide encouragement with them and needy people are endless. By providing a helping hand or listening ear, you'll reap rewards which can't be bought with a dollar bill or on credit.

During the days and weeks ahead, take time to recall the people who've helped you along the way. Don't forget to thank your parents for the sacrifices they made so you could enjoy your school years. Remember the countless times they stood alongside a chilly ball field to watch you play and then drove you home. Don't forget how they rushed home from work to get you to your music lessons, or Little League games. Be sure to thank them for the countless items they provided you with, such as your backpacks, sneakers, school supplies, athletic fees, musical instruments, etc. These items are only a handful of things which they labored to provide you with. Their efforts toward helping you discover your abilities and encouragement cannot likely be calculated. Always remain open toward their advice and you'll likely live long and be content.

Be sure to thank your teachers and coaches. Many of them could have entered careers with more pay but found greater satisfaction with helping you learn. They need to know how much their efforts meant to you.

Encourage them to continue in the path they've chosen.

Your graduation day is something you've earned. Enjoy your day and treasure its importance. Use it as a launching pad toward achieving excellence in your career path and within your community. Your continued efforts will reap their own rewards.

The Learning Lab

TO THE EDITOR:

The suggestion by Bill Stone in the Mariner of June 1 that the Learning Lab "is a plan for a private individual to have an office with a harbor view while paying little or no rent" represents the viewpoint of those who see what is in the gutter but are oblivious to the stars. Unfortunately, his misconception is held by too many others, so that the difficult task of getting the Learning Lab funded and operating is made even more discouraging.

Those of us who shared the vision of the Lab recognized that the generous contribution of time and talent by a professional in the field was far more valuable than the rental value of his office. If Toscanini had offered to lead the town band provided we supplied a bandstand for it, would we hear some snide suggestion that he only wants a bandstand without paying for it? Of course, we would, there are always those who assign base motives to any public-spirited act.

Besides, Mr. Stone has his facts wrong. The scientist who volunteered his valuable talent at no charge has always stated that he would pay market rate rent, so that he could conduct his own business when not supervising the students. Nor was the objective really research on lobsters; it was to stimulate interest in scientific research in the areas of marine biology and genetics.

Well, too many of our fellow townspeople have fallen in line with the destructive gossip, and it is difficult for the rest of us to feel much incentive to do the hard work of making it a reality. Nor would I blame the scientist for concluding that the effort isn't worth suffering the ad homonym attacks.

Veterans memorial

TO THE EDITOR:

During a brief visit to my old hometown of Cohasset last week, I visited Woodside Cemetery to put Memorial Day flowers on the graves of my parents and brother. While there, I could not help but notice and be moved by the large number of fresh, American flags that are placed each year at this time of remembrance, on the graves of the many Cohasset men and women who performed their military duties with great distinction in time of war and peace. Indeed, one such flag has been placed on the grave of my father who served in the United States Army during the First World War, and of my brother who served in the Army during the Korean War.

Later, when I visited the Veterans' Memorial Park down at the harbor, where, as I understand it, it was once planned to have honor rolls of all Cohasset men and women who answered the call to service in all of America's wars, I was disappointed to see that this ambitious project has apparently ended with the erection of the honor roll for Cohasset's World War II veterans. That honor roll, which was superbly spearheaded from design to completion by Austin "Bud" Ahearn, is a grand memorial to the contributions and sacrifices made by Cohasset's members of what Tom Brokaw has, quite accurately, called "The Greatest Generation." But, as I further understand from conversations I had with several fellow veterans while I was in Cohasset, there appears to be no organized program to continue the project with (of special interest to me) honor rolls with the names of those of us who left Cohasset to serve in the Korean and Vietnam Wars, or honor rolls for the Cohasset veterans of Grenada, Panama and Desert Storm. I find this to be unconscionable for a town with the resources Cohasset has available to it.

Next month, we shall observe the 50th anniversary of the start of the Korean War, sometimes referred to as "The Forgotten War." This past April, we observed the 25th anniversary of the end of the Vietnam War. We veterans of those wars are getting long in the tooth and will not have many more years to live to see our names engraved in stone in recognition of our service to our country. Regrettably, many veterans of these later conflicts have already died before seeing their memorials brought to fruition. For example, among those veterans who are no longer with us is my long-time good friend and Cohasset High School classmate, George Jednick, who designed and supervised the completion of the original Memorial Park at its present location on the former site of the central fire station. George served his country in the U. S. Air Force during the Korean War and, because of this service to his country and to his community, his name deserves to be engraved in stone for future generations to see and honor.

I am not sure how the first, World War II phase of this project was funded. Bud Ahearn is much more qualified to speak to that magnificent effort than I am. I recall making a couple of donations to the project in the past. My guess is that it came about mainly through the efforts and donations of the veterans aided by contributions from other supportive citizens. But, I do not believe this important project should continue to be shouldered solely by the veterans themselves.

I believe that the completion of the honor roll project should be the highest priority undertaking of all the citizens of Cohasset who, unlike some of our Cohasset veterans who died in the service of their country, can still enjoy the beauty of Cohasset, its seasonal changes and its nature's chorus. There can be no doubt that the prosperous and gracious, bucolic lifestyle enjoyed by Cohasset's citizens, today, is owed to them, the men and women veterans of Cohasset. Without their selfless devotion and military service to their town and their country, which preserved our precious heritage for us and our descendants to continue to enjoy, our lives would be much different, today. It would seem to me that the price and effort of having the names of Cohasset's veterans inscribed on a few slabs of granite is a small price to be shared by all of Cohasset's residents in order to acknowledge and preserve a record of the service and sacrifices of Cohasset's veterans.

I ask that the Board of Selectmen, the Town's governing body, take the leadership in the funding and completion of the veterans' honor roll project and, in concert with Cohasset's two veterans' organizations, quickly bring about the public recognition of Cohasset's sons' and daughters' sacrifices and service to their country and their town that is long overdue. We, and especially those of us who are still alive but aging fast, deserve your prompt, supportive efforts in this worthwhile cause.

Devine bows out of rep race

Cites time commitment, family concerns

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Sometimes the journey to a place can make finally arriving at the destination seem not worth the trip. Sometimes the sacrifices one has to make to achieve an objective cancels out any benefit the objective carries.

Ask Maureen Devine.

It was in January, with visions of walks up Beacon Hill and continuing the community-orientated reign of fellow Republican Mary Jeanette Murray dancing in her head, that Devine — a five-year member of the Hingham School Committee — announced her intentions to seek the Republican nomination for state representative in the third Plymouth district.

"I explored holding office and thought it was actually something I'd be able to do," she said. "I was not looking to run…I didn't raise my hand. I was encouraged to run. I was asked two years ago by the Republican Party to run and I said no."

But this time, with the 24-year veteran of the State House, Murray, stepping down, the race to fill her seat was wide open, and again Devine got the call.

She received three of them, actually, from Murray herself, in January alone. In fact, Devine toured the State House with Murray and met with the majority and minority leaders of the House.

"With that as a backdrop, I looked into it some more and asked people who have held the position about it and I said, 'Well I can do that' and I said OK, I will run."

But the realities of the campaign soon kicked in. Another Republican candidate was already in the race, Mary Anne McKenna, along with two Democratic challengers, former Hingham selectman Mike Holden and 1998 candidate Garrett Bradley. It recently became a five-way race with the addition of an unenrolled candidate, Walter Murray, a former Democrat, who ran for the Democratic Party nomination for the seat in 1998.

"I talked to [former Abington state representative and current Plymouth County District Attorney] Mike Sullivan and the state rep from Brookline [Ruth Balser] and they said they would start door-knocking around May 1 and basically leave straight from the office and knock until nighttime and again on Saturday and Sunday from May until election day," she said. "That was the reality. You are expected to go to any and all gatherings were votes may be chased: scouts, churches, picnics..."

Maureen Devine

Devine realized that her summer would consist of knocking on doors or attending meetings, and her family would be sacrificed. "An hour a day is not quality time. You just happen to be sharing space with them…If I'm spending Saturdays running from one picnic to some other function, who's at my son's baseball games? Who's going to his concerts? Who's going to my children's school functions?

"The reality is, running for office has to be the most important thing in your life from the moment you announce until election day, and I'm not willing to turn my back on everything."

To say Devine dropped out of the race would be incorrect — she had never filed her candidacy papers. Instead, with her mind made up, she quietly let the May 30 filing deadline pass without submitting them.

"I got my life back!" she said happily in an interview this week. "I can go to baseball games and have dinner with them every night and have a nice summer together."

She said her family had been supportive from the beginning but added that she suspects their attitude might have changed with every event or dinner missed. "My husband [Dennis Bottone] was supportive from the beginning but I have to say, I don't think he's disappointed I pulled out. He wanted me to do what was best for me, and he could see how torn I was. By the time I made my choice, I think he was relieved…It had been a torturous process for me."

Devine admitted she was taken aback when she realized that the local Republican party, which she said had lobbied for her to join the race, did not come out and back her, and said that it played a role in her decision. "I didn't know that they will not support anyone until after the primary…I was on my own and it was up to me, and I couldn't really expect help until after the primary," she said, adding, "It just didn't mean that much to me."

Carl Harris, chairman of the Hingham Republican Town Committee, said he was disappointed in Devine's decision not to run.

"I thought she was an excellent candidate," he said. "But it does take dedication, time and sacrifices and people have to weigh their priorities and make decisions accordingly."

Harris said the up side is that McKenna won't have to expend funds in a primary fight, but the down side is that primaries are healthy and get voters interested in the process. He said the town committee has no formal policy regarding holding off support for a particular candidate until after the primary.

"However, as chairman I would not endorse a candidate until after the primary because we want to encourage everyone to participate. Anyone who wants to step forward and be a candidate is most welcome," Harris said.

Rep. Murray said she had just found out a couple of days ago and was "surprised" by her decision, but hadn't yet talked with Devine about it.

McKenna declined to comment saying, "I'm sure it was very difficult decision for her, and out of respect I feel I shouldn't be commenting at this time."

Both Democratic opponents said Devine would have been a strong opponent. "I think she's a very nice person and would've made a very strong candidate," said Bradley. "I'll miss her views and input on issues like health care, education and tax relief."

Holden echoed Bradley's thoughts. "I think she would have been a very difficult adversary…She's the only Republican with any experience and has shown she can deal with very difficult issues."

Devine said that the response she has received after deciding not to run has been "bittersweet" and will not rule out a future run for higher office. "One of the interesting things is all the phone calls or people who have approached me to say how disappointed they are, but that they admire me for what I was doing."

But despite the enjoyment she might have gotten from working beneath the Sacred Cod which hangs above the House Chamber, she felt she would've lost too much on the home front. "I love my life the way it is."

Anything goes on 'reality TV'

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I confess I watched "Survivor" on Channel 7 the other night, and I feel guilty about it.

Well, I didn't exactly watch all of it. I switched every now and then to see if there was a Shannon Tweed picture on Cinemax. There wasn't.

I felt guilty because I felt I was contributing to the delinquency of my fellow Americans who were making fools of themselves before 15.5 million voyeurs.

In case you've been in a coma in recent weeks, "Survivor" is a show in which the CBS network "marooned" 16 people on an alleged desert island in the South China Sea and promised the sole survivor a cool $1 million if he or she lasted the required 39 days.

What spoiled the Swiss Family Robinson atmosphere for me was the nagging thought that the survivors weren't really alone on that island, that there was someone behind the camera, that there was a director and a producer.

The survivors are weeded out one by one by vote of their companions in each of the 13 episodes that promise to beguile us all summer, even if the Red Sox stay in contention until fall.

We see the contestants, divided into two tribes, arrive on their island by raft, build their own shelters, search for water, and scrounge for food, which, we are promised, will not be all caviar and bon bons.

Shades of "Gilligan's Island!"

The first one to be cast aside by the castaways was the Mrs. Howell of the group, 62-year-old Sonja Christopher, a breast cancer survivor, who suffered the humiliation of having her torch, symbolizing life, ritually snuffed out on camera.

She may be one of the lucky ones.

Every now and then, the CBS camera played lovingly on a family of rats that was nosing around the castaways' meager belongings with the expectation that eventually they would be invited to dinner as the main course.

What spoiled the Swiss Family Robinson atmosphere for me was the nagging thought that the survivors weren't really alone on that island, that there was someone behind the camera, that there was a director and a producer.

I'm sure there were a best boy and a gaffer, too, whatever they are, since no self-respecting television production can get along without them.

As a matter of fact, I learned later, there were about 100 people on the island in the CBS support crew, including three health care deliverers and probably a company of Marines to handle pirates.

On the other side of the island, known to the National Geographic Society as Pulau Tiga, is a brand new resort getting ready to open in July, its gift shop hawking T-shirts emblazoned with the motto "I Survived Pulau Tiga!"

CBS and the other networks call "Survivor" and similar shows "reality TV," capitalizing on what is coming to be recognized as the universal desire of all of us to do anything to get on television.

It's the same drive that caused Darva Conger to go marry a total stranger, Rick Rockwell, before 23 million viewers on the Fox network's short-lived program "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire." He wasn't, so she bowed out.

It's the same desire that causes hordes of eager women to wait for hours in hopes that Katie Couric or Matt Lauer will came by with a microphone or men to remove their shirts and paint "NE Patriots" on their bodies on camera during a football game.

That's not all.

CBS has another "reality" show in the pipe for July. It's called "Big Brother," and it will follow 10 strangers locked in a house for 100 days with cameras rolling on them for 24 hours, seven days a week.

This time, the viewers themselves will get to vote on which one will be evicted. Now that's reality!

Lobster Pound

TO THE EDITOR:

Recent articles in the Patriot Ledger and specifically in the Cohasset Mariner (May 18 — Hope dwindles for plan to relocate lobster shop, May 25 — Selectmen split on lobster pound vote) indicate that the Lobster Pound Inc. at 82 Border St. in Cohasset will not continue in operation due to the fact that the present tenant has been asked to vacate. The paper's position unfortunately is an over-simplification.

It is Mr. Roy's intention to rehabilitate this property and stabilize the income so that in the future, the property can be maintained in a manner that will be a credit to its owner and the Town of Cohasset. This will necessitate increased rents.

Mr. Roy has met with me and we are continuing discussions encouraging me to make more resources available or to find a financial partner willing to invest in a more upscale operation consistent with the significant improvements to be made. Mr. Roy has referred me to Mr. Gerd Ordelheide who has expressed a possible interest in the business as well.

It is my understanding that Mr. Roy has not entered into any long-term lease arrangements with anyone on the property at this point and is continuing plans for renovation. We have been informed that we may remain on the property as he continues his plans for renovation, therefore, it is my intention not to pursue the Hagerty Commission property at this time.

Cemetery space

TO THE EDITOR:

Glenn Pratt deserves congratulations for his persistent pursuit of burial space for Cohasset residents. We hope his efforts are successful.

Meanwhile, residents should know that burial space is available at Cohasset Central Cemetery. A number of unoccupied vaults remain in the Cumner and Tower Columbaria there. Each of the many vaults in the two columbaria will accommodate up to eight urns. Eleanor Tower Campbell, Cemetery Superintendent, will gladly provide more specific information. She can be reached by phone at 383-1436.

Cohasset Central Cemetery, the town's oldest, is at the intersection of North Main Street and Joy Place, overlooking Little Harbor. Its earliest headstone was set, for Margaret Tower, in 1705. Over the years, members of many of Cohasset's important families (Lincoln, Tower, Nichols, Oakes, Hobart and others) have been buried here.

Happily, our columbaria provide room for others to rest in this beautiful and historic place.

Hagerty plans

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to respond to the recent article concerning the Hagerty property, as well as respond to a letter concerning the lobster pound.

The article gave the impression that the plans for the Hagerty property were on the verge of being approved. This is inaccurate in that the Selectmen approved the plans for the property last fall. The Army Corps has recently issued permits for those plans.

When the property was purchased what seems eons ago, one of the stated purposes was to remove commercial influence from an environmentally sensitive area of the harbor. The other was to increase the access to the harbor. The committee has been approached previously to consider a commercial use and has rejected those proposals. Previous Selectmen boards felt that re-zoning was unnecessary stating that the town would not consider commercial usage of the property.

Regarding the letter from Mr. Stone, the Lobster Lab was approved by not one, but two Town Meeting votes. The terms of the lease were discussed and voted on by the Selectmen. According to people involved with the Lab, the plan they are pursuing does not include any office space. The Selectmen are to get an update in September from the Lab, and it's future will be assessed at that time.

To date, approximately $50,000 has been expended on demolition and drawing plans for the Hagerty property. Moneys expended for this work were the result of an anonymous donation of $50,000, with matching funds from the Cohasset Land Trust.

As far as bulldozing the land and putting a few loads of crushed run on top, I wish it was that easy. Because of the proximity to the water, many regulators had to be approached and permits had to be applied for. This was a time consuming thing to say the least.

There is not space for a turn around that would accommodate turning a 45 – 50 foot boat around at the property, even if the house was removed, not to mention that 90 percent of the boats in the harbor are less than 40 feet. As far as backing down Parker Ave, in the last 15 years I've lived on the street, I don't think I've ever seen someone back a boat down Parker Ave. The plans that were submitted allow for ample room for a carrier to enter the Hagerty lot and back up to the ramp, just like they currently do. The Hagerty committee met with a commercial boat hauler to address this concern.

The plans for the Hagerty property are the result of seven years of hard work. The plans are also the result of many public meetings held to get input from everyone in town. The time has come to implement these plans without last minute changes.

Russell Bonetti
Chairman, Hagerty Committee

Lobster lab facts

TO THE EDITOR:

This reply to Bill Stone's letter to the Mariner of June 1 will attempt to correct the ignorance of the facts he displayed therein.

When renovations to the Hagerty building are completed and the Lab is in operation, a Director will be hired to oversee the facility and its various programs for students. Although I had originally offered to serve in that capacity as an unpaid volunteer when the Lab was first being discussed, I subsequently started a biotech company which has been located in the former Webb-Norfolk building off 3A for almost 2 years.

I extend an invitation to Mr. Stone and any of his fellow fishermen, and to the taxpayers of Cohasset to visit our state-of-the-art biological research facility. You will see that I have no need for an office on the harbor ? I already enjoy that view from my home anyway.

More importantly, however, you may chance to see the two top graduates from the Class of 2000 at CHS, Stefan Vanderweil and Brian Tracey, who have been engaged in independent study and internship at our company for the past year. We have more interested students than we can accommodate for next year, which is why we are eager to begin the conversion of the Hagerty building into a year-round student marine science laboratory.

As for the plight of the lobster pound, the Lab has been supportive of their proposed relocation to the Hagerty property, and we have even offered them the showroom addition to the building which we plan to demolish as part of our renovations. Unfortunately, any such plan will reduce the number of parking spaces.

You should redirect your anger and frustration at Michael Sullivan and Merle Brown. They are the ones who voted against you, and who cling to the notion that the best use of the property is for parking spaces that are utilized only a few days a year.

Unfortunately, a more realistic solution is for the lobster pound to relocate to 3A. The lobsters will need to travel another mile or so by truck to reach their tank of recirculated seawater (which they are in now, even though they are located right on the harbor). From that location, they might also build up a retail side to their business, but they will certainly avoid the delays and frustrations of dealing with permitting and regulatory authorities, as well as the ranting and raving of the above-named Selectmen.

Before you put pen to paper again, I would suggest that you get your facts straight, or you will indeed simply be seen as an ignorant fisherman.

Reinstate Osgood technology position

TO THE EDITOR

During recent curriculum meetings at the Osgood School, there has been a growing concern that the Osgood School's technology coordinator position has been cut. The citizens of Cohasset have made a huge commitment to fund the computer hardware, network and infrastructure to support use of technology in our schools. To forgo the trained personnel to teach computer technology reduces the value of this investment in our children's education.

Confronted with rising special education costs, the need for additional teachers in grades K and 3, and a second Kindergarten bus, the School Committee and Principals in Cohasset were faced with difficult choices and did the best they possibly could within the level-funded 2000/01 school budget. Unfortunately, the technology position, which pays approximately $25,000 annually, was one of the items eliminated in February along with various equipment and supplies at all the schools.

Working with every class in K through 3 in the computer lab weekly, the position of technology coordinator at Osgood has become more important, not less. According to Principal Marilee Cantelmo, "the technology coordinator played a role so great that in reality he was working as a teacher on an aide's salary," (Feb. 10 Mariner). This cut compromises an integrated technology curriculum that begins in Kindergarten, and which is linked to science and math among other studies. It means that the technology teacher at Deer Hill is forced to divide time between Osgood and Deer Hill where grades one through six (more than 700 students) will now receive instruction bi-weekly. This translates to approximately 20 times per year as opposed to current instruction twice per week for approximately 74 times per year. Superintendent Malvey has said this will be a "short-term option" (Feb. 10 Mariner). Our goal should be to not let this become an option at all. We need to teach technology in a consistent method, not compromise it as unforeseen budget needs arise.

Let's commit to quality technology instruction and voice our concern as monies may become available in the school budget over the coming weeks. We should not sacrifice other valuable programs to restore this position, but rather be creative and work together in securing other funding sources to keep our commitment to technology instruction alive. For the good of our children it is vital that we work with the School Committee to reinstate this position.

Rider subsidy

TO THE EDITOR:

According to Brian Pedro of the MBTA, an $11 per passenger subsidy for weekend Boston-Hingham ferry service for more than 600 passengers per day "is unacceptable." What counts is "ridership figures and money."

Is this the same Brian Pedro who tirelessly promotes the Greenbush train project? The T will first spend $400 million to build and equip Greenbush, and then provide a per passenger subsidy well in excess of $11 to operate it. (And unlike the short term ferry subsidy contracts, the T will have the $400 million millstone of Greenbush around its neck for decades, whatever the ridership.)

The T has spent more on public relations, lobbying and self-serving consulting reports to push the Greenbush boondoggle than it has spent to subsidize the ferry. But the annoying viability of the ferry continues to threaten the train, so the T is now sandbagging this cost effective transportation link in the name of fiscal responsibility.

The T's cynicism is an insult to Massachusetts taxpayers. If "ridership figures and money" counted, Greenbush would never have been proposed.

Turkey Hill

TO THE EDITOR:

Say! Have you visited the top of Turkey Hill recently?

The Trustees of Reservations, always thinking ahead with plans to enhance our experience of being alive in our local natural world, has opened a grand window to the West for our viewing pleasure.

Generations well before our own saw the view before the trees of recent times reclaimed the open fields that they and their oxen had so laboriously won from the ancient woods.

You owe it to yourselves to refresh your spirits by taking in that view to the West. It's best seen in the forenoon when the sun is behind you.

Private group to spearhead village revitalization plans a public process in the redesign project.

Rizzo was very adamant in insisting that he had no intention of leaving the residents of Cohasset out-of-the-loop. He said that the corporation will be opening an office on Elm Street, at the former home of Victoria's By-the-Sea antique store. "I know that as the project moves forward, it has to be a public process. By having an office, it will allow people to come and see what's going on, or see the plans and give us their input."

He also said that the corporation plans to work very closely with the town's VRTF, and will use it as a "middle-man" between the corporation and the selectmen.

Last week, the VRTF reviewed four proposals from landscape architectural firms and chose the Cecil Group from Boston. Though the Cecil Group submitted the lowest bid at just under $60,000, Rizzo said the group's experience with small sea-side towns was what swayed their vote. He said the Cecil Group has done work in Marblehead and Falmouth and liked the group's focus on making the area more "pedestrian friendly."

Rizzo was at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting to seek the board's approval for $5,000 - which he received - to help subsidize the study. The money had been earmarked for such a study by a prior town meeting vote.

But the focus of the meeting revolved around the set-up of the corporation which Rizzo said should include:

A seven-member board of directors.

Two subcommittees; one subcommittee would be made up of the existing VRTF, plus a selectman and representatives from the various town departments. One representative of the VRTF would have a seat on the board of directors. The other subcommittee would be made up representatives from non-profit groups within the town.

Rizzo said that by having the town and VRTF included in the corporation, the town would have an opportunity for input during the entire length the process. He said that any decisions on the revitalization project will get the approval of the VRTF before it is brought to selectmen. Town Manager Mark Haddad added that "the board will have the final say," on the project.

Selectman Merle Brown, who has been acting as the board's representative to the task force said having a private group spearhead a public improvement project was not "uncommon," and was confident that "they're not going to be sitting in a corner at the Red Lion Inn," making decisions.

Rizzo also said that the corporation has included mandatory public meetings into the Cecil Groups contract.

He also said that part of the reason a private corporation was established to enable donors to contribute tax-free donations during the corporations fund-raising efforts.

Cohasset Lobster Pound gets a reprieve

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Lobster Pound on Border Street in the harbor may not have to move after all.

That's the word from the Tommy Alioto, co-owner of the business, and Peter Roy, his landlord.

Another player may also be entering the picture — Gerde Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn complex.

According to Alioto and Roy's property manager Linda Shropshire — Ordelheide may be interested in getting into the lobster business. With higher rents anticipated once the Mill River Marine Railway boatyard — where the lobster pound is located — is fixed up, Ordelheide's cash could help.

"He wants to get into the lobster business," Alioto said. "And with his money and my experience, maybe we can do something."

Selectmen were set to vote again Tuesday on whether the lobster pound, a private business, could relocate to the town-owned Hagerty property off Parker Avenue. (A prior vote, with one member absent, ended in a tie). But Alioto says that Hagerty proposal, which was floated last month and stirred up a hornet's nest, is now off the table.

> "He wants to get into the lobster business. And with his money and my experience, maybe we can do something."
> — Tommy Alioto, lobster pound

That's good news to Hagerty property committee chairman, Russ Bonetti.

After a lengthy permitting process, Bonetti, who lives on Parker Avenue, said plans to turn the two-acre parcel into a parking lot and small park are moving forward. A new wrinkle in the plans — such as relocation of the lobster pound at the site the town bought seven years ago in order to gain more harbor access — didn't make his day.

"Before anyone starts making plans for a town-owned piece of property, they ought to check to see if any committee is working on it before going out in public with their proposal," Bonetti said.

Shropshire said Roy is looking to renovate the dilapidated Mill River site, some of which is unsafe, but keep the historic look there. She said the lobster pound is welcome to remain at least until the long-term plans for the parcel are worked out.

Roy, who also owns Kimball's and Atlantica, is interested in restoring the area and the any plans would be finalized at the earliest this fall, Shropshire said.

She said after publicity surrounding the lobster pound appeared, Roy had had several irate calls claiming he was trying to shut down the fishing industry in Cohasset.

Nothing could be further from the truth, she said.

Alioto said at the very least, he has time to make plans that could involve either staying where he is or relocating. The lobster season ends Jan. 1.

"Mr. Roy is a nice guy, he is an understanding person," Alioto said. "I'm not rushing, I don't have to do anything right now.

"Hopefully, we can work something out. I really believe we will."

Ordelheide is out of the country until the end of the week and could not be reached for comment.

Final decision on Hagerty house due

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

On the heels of the Cohasset Lobster Pound decision not to attempt to relocate to the town-owned Hagerty property at the end of Parker Avenue, Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan said the board will review the town's lease with the Cohasset Lobster Lab in September, with a "definitive decision" on the property's future made at the fall special town meeting.

Callahan said he wants to let lobster lab president Kevin Ulmer "run the program and see if it works" at the site for the summer and then will ask to meet with Ulmer at the board's second meeting in September to discuss the status of the lease. Callahan also said he wants to see if promised physical improvements are made to the exterior of the Hagerty house.

Callahan said he would also reconsider selling the house, which was the former office and showroom for Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit manufacturing company.

"Our view is that either the lobster lab will continue, or there will be some other definitive decision made," he said.

Hagerty Property Committee chairman Russ Bonetti said at the meeting that he would like to see the "wheels get in motion" to change of the property's zoning from light-industry to open-space at this fall's town meeting. He said that the board should address the zoning issue now, before it becomes an issue again in the future. The committee recently received the needed permits from the Army Corp of Engineers to construct a municipal parking lot on the water-front site.

Girls smash Vineyard

Only Cohasset team to move on to South sectional quarterfinals

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

First-round matches in spring state tournaments are always difficult. Not only is the opponent usually an unknown quantity, but athletes, especially seniors, can lose focus with proms and graduations on their minds.

With all those factors in mind, Cohasset girls tennis coach Gigi Meehan was understandably nervous about how her team would fare against Martha's Vineyard on Monday afternoon.

"In the tournament, there are a lot of upsets because the favored teams get a little nervous. I'm just glad to get this first one out of the way."

Girls tennis coach Gigi Meehan

She needn't have worried.

Her Skippers came out focused and dispatched the Vineyarders 4-1 to move on to the South sectional quarterfinals against Westwood.

"It was a good win," Meehan said. "They [Martha's Vineyard] were a tough little team. They were very similar to us, actually. We were just a little stronger overall. In the tournament, there are a lot of upsets because the favored teams get a little nervous. I'm just glad to get this first one out of the way."

Leading the way for Cohasset, as she has done the past four years, was senior Kate Stone, who efficiently took care of Ellie Reece 6-2, 6-0.

Stone and Reece traded points in the opening games of the first set, but Stone quickly took control, running Reece all over the court on her way to the easy victory.

Seniors shine as baseball team loses in first round

By David Ingber

After a terrific season, the Cohasset varsity baseball team was ousted by 15th-seeded West Bridgewater, 4-2 in a first round thriller at the state tournament last week.

In their final contest in a Skipper uniform, the only two seniors on the squad, Joe Pergola and Greg O'Keeffe, closed out their outstanding seasons with great games.

Pergola, a tremendous team leader all season long, collected Cohasset's only two hits with a home run and an RBI single.

O'Keeffe, who all season has been the ace of the Cohasset pitching staff, hurled a complete game five hitter, allowing three earned runs.

"The seniors definitely stepped up for us," said Coach Robert Knurek. "They knew it was their last game, and they definitely played like it."

O'Keeffe has had tremendous success the whole season, highlighting the year with his no-hitter against South Shore Vo Tech, and was named starting pitcher for the South Shore-Patriot League All-Star game.

Pergola also had a terrific final season, with timely hitting and extremely solid defense at first base.

"Greg's pitching, and Joe's hitting and fielding, they were just phenomenal," said Knurek.

Despite the competitive effort from both seniors, West Bridgewater did come away with the win, and went on to defeat Old Colony in the second round of the tournament.

"I told the team before the game, let's play a game where if we lose, it was the better team that beat us," said Knurek.

So with Cohasset out of the playoff race, Skipper fans can look forward to next year, where there are some pretty high expectations.

Sports, science converge at training facility

By Jerry Elsden

Build it, and they will come.

That's the dream of four guys named John Spatola, Doug Fairbanks, Brandon Hourigan and Joe Hayes. They've opened a sports training facility on Route 53 in Norwell called Exceleration.

It's a new concept for the South Shore, and only the second in the state. You'll see more facilities like it soon because the general public needs to be educated in the science of athletics, states Fairbanks, the program director.

This foursome wants to train team athletes who are serious about reaching their peak performance. The committed solo athlete is welcome, too.

Exceleration is not a health club, and it doesn't offer memberships, just programs. The trainer-to-athlete ratio is one to four.

Spatola, Exceleration's president, has contacted area coaches and will hold seminars this Spring. A month ago, Marshfield basketball coach Paul Wholey signed up about 15 Marshfield boys grades eight to 12 from his team, some of whom play other sports.

"The kids seem to be really excited about it. They hate to miss a class," he says. "They're learning the proper techniques from some highly qualified professionals."

The Marshfield players had been looking for a way to get stronger and faster to make them competitive next season.

Wholey thinks the training the boys are getting now "will set them up for the rest of their high school careers, and for life."

I've heard nothing but positive things," Wholye says. "The kids like the fact that they're being measured, and they're improving."

Exceleration fills a need created by the South Shore runners help fight Lou Gehrig's Disease

Road race this Saturday benefits research toward a cure

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Though upwards of 1,000 runners are expected to take part in a Quincy road race this Saturday to benefit research toward a cure for amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, better known as Lou Gehrig's Disease, the organizers of the event and many of those taking part in the race will have only one person on their minds.

The Squirrel Run was launched in 1998 by childhood friends Marty Levenson and Richard Kennedy in memory of Kennedy's brother, Jimmy, who died of the disease in April 1997 at age 31.

"It's grown the way we hoped it would," Levenson said of the Squirrel Run, named in honor of Jimmy's childhood nickname. "The race was born out of frustration, mostly. Watching Jimmy suffer was the most heartbreaking thing I've ever experienced. After he died, we felt like we had to do something to help."

The youngest of nine children, Jimmy had seen the debilitating effects of ALS firsthand before he was diagnosed with the disease. His father, Chris Kennedy, died from the disease in 1989, and it was Jimmy who helped his mother care for him as his condition worsened.

"Being the youngest, Jimmy was the only one who wasn't really tied down at the time," Richard Kennedy said. "He moved back home to take care of our dad. When Jimmy was diagnosed, we all knew it was fatal. It's a terrible story, not only because he was the youngest, but because he was the one who had seen my dad suffer. He knew what was going to happen to him."

ALS is a neuromuscular disease that attacks a person's muscles and gets progressively worse over time, until a person is unable to walk, communicate, swallow, and, ultimately, breathe.

While the body is ravaged, however, the victim's mind is unaffected, meaning that those afflicted can fully understand and comprehend what is happening to them.

"I think the worst part of the disease is that your mind stays intact," said John Webb of Kingston, a friend of the Kennedy family growing up in Quincy, at whose wedding Jimmy served as Best Man. "Jimmy was one of the smartest people I've ever known. He was near the top of his class at Georgetown Law School. He was also a phenomenal football player and runner, which made it even harder to watch as he had to sit in a wheelchair."

One of the toughest parts of Jimmy's diagnosis was that it came on the heels of his wife Karen's announcement that she was pregnant with their first child. Jimmy's son, Trevor, is now 6 years old, and Webb said it was difficult to watch Jimmy's body deteriorate as Trevor's life was just beginning.

"He never really got to hold his son," Webb said. "He understood what he was going to be missing out on."

After watching Jimmy suffer, Richard Kennedy said it was time to do something to fight ALS, which does have a hereditary component.

"They say about 20 percent of the cases have a genetic link," Kennedy said. "When my dad died, that link was not understood. My poor mother has lost her youngest son and husband to this disease. She now has 17 grandchildren and I have four kids of my own. We want to ensure that this doesn't happen to anyone in our family's younger generation."

All of the proceeds from the Squirrel Run will benefit the Cecil B. Day Laboratory for Neuromuscular Research at Mass. General Hospital. Richard Kennedy said new advances are beginning to shed some light on ALS.

"We're seeing so much progress," he said. "They've discovered that there's a positive link between ALS and Huntington's Disease, Alzheimer's Disease and Parkinson's Syndrome. It's an exciting time to see what's happening. With the computer research that's being done, hopefully there will be bigger advances in the near future."

Levenson and Richard Kennedy said they hope to raise as much as $50,000 in proceeds at Saturday's run to help aid in that process. The 5-mile Squirrel Run begins at Quincy's Veterans Stadium at 10 a.m. and is preceded by a 2 1/2 mile walk, which starts at 9 a.m. There will also be plenty of activities for kids at the family event.

The T-shirts given to race entrants and the jackets worn by race volunteers are being supplied by New Balance shoes, who became involved through Steve Etridge of Marshfield, senior product manager for New Balance.

"I became involved through a friend who knew Marty [Levenson]," Etridge said. "It was apropos, because the day before I met Marty, I had seen a special on television about someone in Newton who was taking care of his brother, who had ALS."

The involvement of people throughout the South Shore can help to aid the fight against a disease which took Jimmy Kennedy's life and has taken that of many others.

"I had Jimmy's Northeastern student ID in my pocket when I ran it last year," Webb said. "I came in dead last, but I wouldn't have wanted to be anywhere else in the world than running the race in his honor."

Anyone wishing to take part in the Squirrel Run may contact Levenson at (978) 750-0760. Donations can be made to Squirrel Run III, 4 Truche Way, Danvers, MA 01923.

Runners hit the streets at last year's Squirrel Run to benefit ALS research.

Getting together at last year's Squirrel Run were former Massachusetts governor Michael Dukakis, race organizer Richard Kennedy, Quincy mayor James Sheets, House speaker Thomas Finneran, and race organizer Marty Levenson.

"We have the potential to do even better next year," said Knurek, who knows his team cannot just coast on reputation to make the postseason again. "We have seven starters returning next year. Our juniors saw the seniors [Pergola and O'Keeffe] play all season, so they know what's expected of them."

Among those returning will be junior centerfielder Doug O'Brien, the only other Skipper selected to the All-Star team, who led the South Shore league in batting average this season.

Also returning will be sophomore pitcher/shortstop Nick Bolster, a right handed fastballer, who pitched a no-hitter against rival Hull, and will most likely be Cohasset's premiere starting pitcher with Pergola and O'Keeffe graduating.

Finishing the year with a record of 11-9, and with only brighter things yet to come, the next few seasons should be quite entertaining for fans of Cohasset baseball.

Girls smash Martha's Vineyard not lost so much as a set. She carried her outstanding play into the tournament, downing Kate London 6-4, 6-1, using her outstanding backhand to befuddle her opponent.

"She just spanks the ball," Meehan said. "The amazing thing is she wasn't even going to come out for tennis. She's such a good player and a good athlete. When I went to the league coaches' meeting to pick the league all-stars, they all said 'Can I have her?' She's going to be a great player for us."

Grossman's dominance at number two singles is nothing new for Cohasset.

"Last year, we had the same situation," she said. "Katie Brister would beat people 6-0, 6-0. Unfortunately for her, she was around at the same time as Kate, so she couldn't play number one. Lindsay's going to have that opportunity next year."

The closest singles match of the day came at third singles, where another Cohasset freshman, Julie Shea, was down 4-0 in the first set before rallying to defeat Alicia Agnoli 6-4, 7-5.

In the opening games, Agnoli was dominant, using her hard ground strokes to push Shea toward the baseline and coming to the net to put away easy winners.

As the set progressed, however, Shea figured out Agnoli's strategy and used lobs and passing shots to take Agnoli out of her game.

"Julie was a little nervous at the beginning," Meehan said. "But what I love about her is that she got angry, went within herself, and turned it around. She's got a really good head for a freshman."

The only blemish on the day for Cohasset came at first doubles, where Ary Afshar and Jessie Zerendow dropped a three-setter to Abby Brown and Lisa Barbini, 4-6, 6-2, 3-6.

Meehan said Afshar and Zerendow had their moments, but were taken out of their game by the pair from the Vineyard.

"The girls they played were very tenacious," she said. "At the beginning, they were both coming to the net, but they were making some errors. I didn't mind, because their strategy was correct. They were just making errors of execution. When they started making errors, they got out of their game and started making errors of strategy rather than execution."

The second doubles tandem of Kelly Stone and Jessica Niessink continued their undefeated season, easily beating Kate Ferriera and Leann Gordano 6-1, 6-3.

"I really thought the match could have gone either way. Julie's match was close and Lindsay's match was close for a while, too."

With a first-round victory under their belts, the fifth-seeded Skippers (10-1) were to face fourth seed Westwood (14-1) yesterday. Should the Skippers advance, they will play today against the winner of top-seeded Bourne (18-0) and league nemesis Norwell (12-5), whom the Skippers split two matches with this season, in the sectional semifinals.

"I'd love to get though," Meehan said. "The girls have had a fabulous season and it would be great to keep it going."

Sports, science converge at training facility

"dumbing down" of public school P.E. classes, notes Fairbanks, formerly of Hingham, who holds a B.S in Physical Education and Health Fitness from Springfield College. "Today's physical education lacks bio-mechanics and muscle strengthening. We're not keeping up with other countries as a result," he says.

"Kids today are not fit because they lack spontaneity. We really are victims of our own affluence, and raising a generation of couch potatoes who don't have after-school sports programs to go to."

Fairbanks spent the last four years as strength and conditioning coach for all athletes at Boston College High School, and he was assistant JV basketball coach under Head Coach Mark Conroy.

Spatola agrees. "Kids don't play pick-up games on town fields or in their neighborhoods anymore, like I did growing up in Milton. They're all in cars, being driven to structured, organized sports," he laments.

A 1974 Boston College graduate, Spatola got the idea for Exceleration last year after driving his hockey-playing son back and forth to Burlington for training. He had recently sold his family's wholesale meat company, and was looking for a business to run.

"I asked them if they would be interested in opening a 'facility on the South Shore, because I thought there was a need," he says. "After a few months of hemming and hawing, they backed off. But I still wanted to do it, and started looking for partners."

Then he read about Fairbanks in a Boston Globe story, that he trained Milton's Mike Ryan, the Northeastern freshman who recently was drafted in the first round by the Dallas Stars.

"I know Mike's family, so I asked them about Doug. I found out he'd been looking for a slot at a sports training facility such as I envisioned. I thought, 'maybe he could be my guru.'" The rest is history.

Meanwhile, Hourigan and Fairbanks had connected in the summer of 1998 at a strength and conditioning conference in Nashville, Tenn. At the time Hourigan was a strength and conditioning intern with the Kansas City Chiefs. Before that he trained athletes at Clemson University.

"We talked about ideas, like testing athletes, and we stayed in touch," recalls Fairbanks.

Hourigan and the Chiefs parted ways in October last year after months of contract wrangling.

Hayes holds the record for the most yards per carry at Springfield College and was reviewed by a number of NFL teams. He was a 1991 state wrestling champion from Scituate High School, and a runner-up for state champion. As a sprinter he recorded the fastest 40 yard dash ever at 4.30.

Joe's so fast he was asked to be on the 2000 Winter Olympic bobsled team. The fastest and strongest are usually recruited for bobsled events because the running part comes first. Hayes has also been a personal trainer for professional athletes in the Miami area.

It wasn't that long ago that so-called strength and conditioning trainers at the high school level were hired "because they were the coach's best friend," explains Fairbanks. "There was no scientific training to it." Some colleges, however, have had qualified trainers for at least 10 years. Florida, California and Texas have had strength and conditioning centers for years and the weather to go along with it.

It is a science, and deals with at least five separate concepts: strength, nutrition, speed, power and flexibility.

After that, sub-concepts like metabolic and interval training, intensity and duration, peel off like the layers of an onion.

"Most people get caught in a rut" of training, explains Hayes. "Basically, it's about how hard is the intensity, how often the frequency, how long the duration, and the type of lifting (weights)."

Then there is the equipment.

At Exceleration the serious athlete will find physioballs, hurdles, quick foot ladders, balance builders, slide boards, warm up bikes, and a fair amount of weight lifting machines and free weights. There are jump ropes for "resting periods," and bright orange cones used for sprinting and lateral movements." More training aides are stored in a large closet. No resemblance to a health club here.

"We chose the equipment to what fits into our philosophy," says Fairbanks.

By tailoring the program to body type and sport, trainers can provide athletes with a competitive edge.

High school teams are Exceleration's immediate target audience, but he envisions middle school youngsters as a long-term project.

"The next wave is working with kids 10 and older. Things like balance, skipping, and forward rolls, like what we used to get in PE. We have 30-year olds in here now who can't do these things," he notes.

"If we do this well, we'll be providing a vehicle for the committed athlete, whether on a team or not. But they must show a commitment to us. It's a two-way street."

Exceleration is located to the rear of Family Fitness at 412 Washington Street, Norwell (Route 53). Spatola can be reached at 781-659-8200.

Fall claims life of Cohasset woman

Oregon Episcopal School after moving to Portland in 1994. She most recently had been working at the Novartis Pharmaceutical Corporation as a clinical research coordinator and monitor.

"She never would've gone into pure research because working with the patients was too important to her," said her mother.

Diana was scheduled to enter the Oregon Health and Sciences University in the fall to persue her medical degree. "She was very interested in naturopathic medicine," Kornet said.

Diana was also an accomplished vocalist, and performed with Dartmouth College's glee club and Dodecaphonics, an a cappella ensemble, in which she sang with her brother, John. In Portland, she was a member of the Oregon Repertory Singers.

She had traveled to Kenya, Jamaica and Costa Rica while at Dartmouth, learning about the countries' different cultures and social perspectives. Diana also enjoyed painting, dying silk, and designing jewelry, and sold silk scarves and ties under her label, "Artemis Designs."

Kornet also said her daughter was very much a "people person."

"She had a wonderful sense of humor and always had a smile on her face. She was one of those people who would walk into a room full of people and within half an hour would have discovered a person who should meet someone on the other side of the room because they had something in common.

"Other members of the family were amazed at how she would just charge ahead and do something," she said.

Her desire to be active led her to tackle climbing, and she scaled Mount Hood for the first time last June. Last Sunday, Diana and seven of her friends again reached the top of the 11,240-foot summit around 7 a.m.

"Everyone is tethered when they climb," said Kornet, "and when they reach the top, they detach the tethers."

According to Sgt. Dwayne Troxel, the summit of Mount Hood is generally flat, but gets progressively steeper farther away from the summit. Just after 7:30 a.m. on Sunday, with temperatures in the 40s, and "fairly high winds," Diana slipped and fell more than 2,500 feet. Sheriff Joe Wampler, who was flying a small plane, found her less than an hour later just 50 feet from where two climbers were found in a similar accident last year.

Diana Bradford Kornet with her nephew Jack. Jack's baby sister Rachel Diana Kornet was born Monday.

Memorial services will be held in Portland on June 12, and a week later at 3 p.m. at First Parish, in Cohasset. She leaves her parents, her brother, John, and sisters Abigail, of Cohasset and Allison, of Alexandria, Va., and grandparents Anne Hall Davis McMahon and David M. Davis. Her family has requested that instead of flowers, contributions may be made in her name to the Sierra Club, Cousteau Society or Northwest Earth Institute.

Kornet said her son, John and his wife, Rebecca, gave birth to a girl on Monday. She will be named Rachel Diana.

Hedlund's train effort knocked

ing one side over the other.

"It's a moot point," said LeClair. "Hingham made a deal with the MBTA to put the train in."

"Greenbush is coming," said Cantwell, who said he is not fence-sitting, and is instead being pragmatic. "Restoration is a reality."

Cantwell also cited Hingham's deal to have the MBTA construct a tunnel underneath Hingham Square and the pledge by Governor Paul Cellucci to restore the line — the third consecutive governor to do so — in his decision to not argue the merits of the project. "The question is, why take a vote after [Hingham] voted for a settlement." He also considered the vote "political grandstanding at its worst" and said "the time for a vote like that should have been years ago."

LeClair questioned why Hedlund wasn't able to have any sort of influence over fellow Republican Cellucci, when the normally fiscally conservative governor announced his support for the $408 million project. But LeClair supplied an answer to his own question by saying he felt Hedlund made a big mistake in supporting Joe Malone when the then-State Treasurer ran against Cellucci for the Republican gubernatorial bid in 1998. "The governor had no reason to help Hedlund," said LeClair who added that Hedlund did the South Shore no favors by supporting Malone.

Cantwell saw it as further example of Hedlund's inability to have an impact on important issues in his district. "Normally, great deference is given to legislators when they propose action for their district," said Cantwell, who spent time as a legislative aide in the Senate.

"I don't worry on whether it's a Democratic or Republican issue," responded Hedlund. "I conduct myself on what I believe to be right."

He explained that under the old MBTA financing plan, the MBTA had to get approval by the Legislature before applying for a loan for any capital projects. Hedlund said votes approving the borrowing for Greenbush, the final line of the Old Colony restoration to bring train service to Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset, happened before he was elected in 1990 and also during the two years Brian McDonald held the office in 1993 and '94.

Hedlund did concede that the chances the line can be stopped legislatively is "nil" but said he is working with the state and community leaders to make sure the towns affected by Greenbush receive proper mitigation packages similar to the $1.3 million historic preservation deal Hingham struck; a claim both challengers refuted.

LeClair said that although Hedlund may been involved in the Hingham deal, he points to Scituate as a place feeling left out. A LeClair supporter, Scituate Selectman Richard Lane, who is unenrolled and sits on the town's mitigation board, said that Hedlund has yet to make it to a mitigation meeting in the town nor to any of the meetings with the Army Corp of Engineers. "He hasn't been there...his involvement should've been greater," said Lane, adding that Hedlund's vote was him being an "11th-hour participant."

Hedlund disputed Lane's comments.

The senator said that he has attended all the MBTA public information meetings held in the five towns along the line, he has attended all MBTA public hearings on the train, all legislative hearings, spoke at the Army Corps hearing and submitted 13 pages of comments on the supplemental draft EIR, the environmental feasibility study on the train.

Hingham selectman Martin Crane, a Republican, said Hedlund, while the senator hasn't been present at all mitigation hearings, the senator has been available for support.

Cantwell said he feels the South Shore is losing out in the mitigation department, and should be aiming for such things as the vibration-reducing bituminous concrete Beverly had included in the mitigation package for its historic district.

All three candidates agreed on the areas of concern, now that Hingham seems to be resolved; the location of the layover station on the North River in Scituate, flood control in Cohasset, and the possible 30 grade crossings along the 17-mile track, in particular the crossings through Weymouth Landing.

Cantwell pointed to the work he did in the preservation of the Daniel Webster Estate and his current job as an environmental lawyer, as to why he'd be the man best suited to call Beacon Hill his new place of employment. "It comes down to who will best protect the interests of these towns," he said.

LeClair referred to his own experience in the Navy when he helped oversee a mitigation package for a shipyard that was being disassembled. "We need someone that isn't always reacting and is instead out taking the lead."

Cantwell and LeClair will face-off in the Democratic primary Sept. 19. The winner will face Hedlund, who is running unopposed from his party, for the Norfolk-Plymouth Senate seat.

"I don't think the other two know the particulars as well as I do," said Hedlund, "I have a great working relationship with all the key people involved in the discussion." Hedlund also pointed to his position as ranking minority member on the Senate's transportation committee, which, according to him, is where all the decisions on the mitigation packages will ultimately come from.

COHASSET CARES

Graduation homilies

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It's that time of year when institutions of learning try to leave their graduates with some last bit of wisdom. "It's an education now to go to the dump," I heard a parent say the other day, referring, to some extent, to the need to be up on recycling, how just about everything is recyclable, becoming more aware of over-packaging, for starters. I figure, all things considered, that makes the RTF a kind of institution of learning, so here's a graduation homily.

Cohasset RECYCLING TRANSFER Facility

All right, here it is: at one place or another in my recycling travels I am hearing, and I am saying, that recycling is a moral imperative.

Recycling finally is big business. I attended the annual EnviroExpo at the Boston Trade Center recently, the place where our Recycling Committee Chairman Arthur Lehr was presented with the Outstanding Recycling Volunteer of the Year award last year. The numerous booths, displays and workshops at the Expo covered the subject from toothbrushes made from recycled plastic to huge glistening multi-purpose trucks. I attended a lecture by a member of Congress on future sustainability. I also attended the monthly South Shore Recycling Cooperative meeting recently where one of the major topics was boutiques/swap shops/take it or leave it facilities. The local Voluntary Simplicity group I've referred to in recent columns is going strong and gaining momentum despite summer's approach. I was delighted to discover a local business that welcomes those used styrofoam packing peanuts, and that place is Thompson's Business Services at 92 Front St. in Scituate Harbor. Since proprietor Bill Thompson pays $24 for a rubbish barrel-sized bag of the stuff new, he was happy to take the time to talk about recycling the things. Bill's shop is centrally located on Front Street on the same side as and near the theater.

So where's the graduation homily, you ask? All right, here it is: at one place or another in my recycling travels I am hearing, and I am saying, that recycling is a moral imperative. Aside from — nay, forget the economics altogether — we owe it to the earth to recycle. It's our debt, our responsibility as caretakers. It is heartening to see Maureen Alcott's third graders leading the recycling efforts at the Osgood School; it is heartening to see Deer Hill students Joanna Hamilton and Krystal Hudson receiving awards for nurturing outstanding plants grown in RTF compost; it is heartening to see Bonnie Muir at the high school leading her students in recycling projects using aluminum soda cans. Every one of us should recycle with joy and gratitude for all that we have been given. It's not only the least we can do, it is a ritual of daily praise. Amen. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Bradley golf tourney

With the sun shining and a beautiful long weekend ahead for many, Democratic Candidate Garrett Bradley's golf tournament was a huge success. The weather cooperated, the turnout was high, and the money raised will allow the campaign to talk to voters on a one-to-one basis.

"I have been talking to voters door-to-door in the evenings and on weekends," stated Bradley. "And the money raised at the golf tournament will help the campaign so volunteers can call voters on my behalf and we can send out personal letters thanking voters for their support."

For more information about Bradley and his campaign for State Representative, residents can call Michael Salerno at the Bradley headquarters at 740-7272 or check out the web site at www.garrettbradley.com.

Sunset cruise

The Committee to Elect Mike Holden is hosting a sunset cruise on Boston Harbor on Friday, June 16. All are welcome for an evening of conversation, dancing, fine food and fun. The Massachusetts will board at 7:30 p.m. and depart from the commuter boat dock, Shipyard Drive, in Hingham (by the Hingham Bay Club) at 8 p.m. for a three hour cruise. For more information contact Holden Headquarters at 740-0035 or call Kristi Holden at 749-9839.

McKenna fundraiser

The Citizens for McKenna will hold a campaign fundraiser for Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for State Representative in Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset. The fundraiser will be held on Tuesday, June 13, from 7 – 9 p.m. at Tosca in downtown Hingham.

The public is welcome. For further information please call Mary Anne at 749-5004, Billy Ramsey at 749-2532, or Kay Mahoney at 925-1084.

Edwards to address local Republicans

Professor Mickey Edwards of the Kennedy School of Government, former congressman from Oklahoma and current Hingham resident will address the Republican Town Committee meeting on Thursday, June 8, at the Sons of Italy Hall at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited.

Edwards will offer his views on his vision of governance for the 21st century.

Edwards is the John Quincy Adams lecturer in Legislative Politics, specializing in teaching about the Congress, American election campaigns, political leadership, and conservative political philosophy. Before joining the faculty, he was a member of Congress for 16 years and chair of the House Republican Policy Committee, the fourth-ranking Republican leadership position in the House of Representatives.

A founding trustee of the Heritage Foundation, he has served as co-chairman of a joint Brookings Institution/Council on Foreign Relations Task Force on International Affairs and has directed several other national projects for organizations such as the 20th Century Fund and the Sonos Foundation.

In addition candidates for state and Plymouth County offices will attend including: Maureen Devine and Mary Anne McKenna candidates for state representative; Sen. Robert Hedlund, Sheriff Charles Decas, John Cafferty and Bill Sims for County Commissioner, Anne Hummel for Registrar of Deeds, and Andy Burbine, Laurence Novak and Russell McGilvrary all candidates for Registrar of Probate.

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray and Hedlund will present Beacon Hill status reports and will be available for questions.

For more information, call Carl Harris at 749-7115, Ann Collins at 749-0817 or Jim Claypoole at 749-9404.

Office vandalized

Former Plymouth County prosecutor and current candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley had his campaign headquarters struck by an act of vandalism late Saturday afternoon. Campaign staff found the door of the headquarters, which is located above the Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham, pried open and the office ransacked and ravaged by a fire extinguisher. The chemicals from the extinguisher destroyed campaign signs and brochures, and may have caused serious damage to a printer and fax equipment.

"I am disappointed that someone would do this sort of thing," stated Bradley. "But it is not going to slow down the Bradley campaign. We are going to have volunteers on the phones tonight calling voters, as we do every week." Bradley volunteers pitched in and cleaned the office on Sunday. Although some campaign materials will inevitably have to be replaced, the vandalism has not extinguished the Bradley spirit.

For more information about Bradley and his campaign, residents can call Michael Salerno at the Bradley headquarters at 740-7272 or check out the web site at www.garrettbradley.com.

Task force: South Shore is target for more plane traffic

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Hingham's jet noise task force has been doing its "homework."

During the course of preliminary research on the issue, task force members say they've gathered information "of such import to South Shore towns" that other task force findings pale — at least for the time being — in comparison.

Task force members believe MassPort has a plan for significantly shifting the burden of jet traffic to and from Logan Airport onto South Shore communities – with more than two-thirds of existing Logan International Airport traffic already being routed south of the facility.

Federal Aviation Administration and MassPort spokespersons, however, deny such an initiative exists.

Nevertheless, jet noise remains an issue.

"It's not just Hingham that's experiencing problems with it," said Albert Engelhart, a task force member. "The entire South Shore is affected, including Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate and Weymouth."

Last year, there were 522,822 arrivals and departures from Logan, which means 348,548 (two-thirds) were routed south of Boston.

"It's like they're taking the South Shore by eminent domain," said task force member Mary Ann Frye.

While MassPort Noise and Abatement Supervisor Nancy Timmerman confirms the two-thirds figure, she's unaware of any initiative to move as much Logan traffic as possible onto the South Shore.

John Silva, manager of environmental programs for the New England Region Federal Aviation Administration, also denies such a plan exists.

The task force also claims all late night and early morning arrivals (traffic after midnight) have recently been shifted onto Runway 33, routed over Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, regardless of the wind direction. They also fear all new traffic to and from the proposed runway 14/32 – which is currently under discussion – is aimed South Shore communities.

"Maps from MassPort's recent Draft Environmental Impact Statement show all the traffic from proposed Runway 14/32 aimed right at the South Shore," according to a memorandum sent to Hingham selectmen June 2 by the task force.

Silva, on the other hand, holds a different view.

"We're not targeting the South Shore," he said. "Over-water procedures will be used, although obviously a lot of the traffic goes over land – but at a much higher altitude (because the planes have picked up height while traveling over the ocean). Thus it's less noisy."

Sensitivity to the environment is the first priority, Silva said.

Runway 14/32 would accommodate arriving aircraft, while Runway 15 would be used for departing flights.

The new runway – if it becomes a reality – is expected to direct 75,000 more flights annually over Boston Harbor, which the task force says would affect Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Hull.

While Timmerman agrees Runway 33 is the preferred arrival runway during the middle of the night, she said that's been the case for more than 20 years.

However, she confirmed that more flights are taking place at 3, 4 and 5 a.m., which wasn't the case previously. That could be due in part to the fact that cargo companies and other airlines feel they have more leeway to fly during early-morning hours because all jets using Logan must conform to a ruling requiring "quieter" types of jets for nighttime flying.

"'Quieter," though, can be a relative term.

That could account for an increase in air disturbances experienced by residents, particularly in the World's End, Crow Point, Turkey Hill and other north Hingham neighborhoods.

"It's like they're taking the South Shore by eminent domain."

— task force member Mary Ann Frye

In fact, some task force members have heard comments from individuals who say they no longer visit World's End park because of the jet noise. Others avoid Turkey Hill because they don't enjoy "watching the underbellies of airplanes," according to Engelhart. "Places of recreation are now being taken away."

While Timmerman said the path of Runway 33 lies mostly over the water, planes are flying – at higher altitudes – over some residential areas – in particular, Hingham and Hull.

Winthrop, she noted, "has it worse" because planes routed in that direction are only flying at altitudes of hundreds of feet.

"It's a difficult issue, but it's not like we don't want to look out for the South Shore," Timmerman said.

In response to suggestions made by some individuals that the Runway 33 arrival path could be changed in order to avoid the Hull peninsula, Timmerman's office came up with a plan three to six months ago – in cooperation with the Federal Aviation Administration – to charter just such a path for jet traffic during nighttime hours.

Timmerman asked staff at the airport tower recently why that path is not being used.

"It's my understanding that the pilots refused it because it was difficult to line up on the runway," she said. "It was a safety issue, because I believe they were concerned they'd miss the runway. The tower finally gave up pushing (that path), but it's still in existence as far as I know."

This year's town meeting supported a warrant article asking the board of selectmen to do everything in its power to protect Hingham from noise and other impacts of jet air traffic to and from Logan Airport.

In addition to existing problems from jet noise, the addition of a third runway that's being proposed for Logan would worsen the situation.

Already the noise situation issue is unbearable for some Hingham residents.

"Children and professionals alike are being awakened in the middle of the night, which is having an effect on their schoolwork and jobs due to lack of sleep from these interruptions," Engelhart said. "According to Amnesty International, sleep deprivation is a method of torture."

The task force is requesting Hingham selectmen invite officials from those neighboring towns to a regional meeting to unite the South Shore in addressing the jet noise issue. At that time, the Hingham task force will make a full report of its findings.

MassPort's recent application to the Federal Aviation Administration for clearance to build the new runway resulted in an FAA request for more study.

As a result, a blue ribbon study panel was appointed – half by Gov. Paul Cellucci – a proponent of 14/32, and half by Mayor Menino, who opposes the runway.

Despite the expected impact on South Shore communities, to date the South Shore doesn't have a representative on the panel.

The jet noise task force was originally formed in response to the huge volume of jet traffic already routed over South Shore communities during the past 18 months. Its members feel there are more feasible alternatives to routing Logan air traffic other than over South Shore homes.

In fact, the Hull jet noise task force is preparing an alternate proposal for safe arrivals on Runway 33 which wouldn't go over land.

MassPort has a special line on which residents can record noise complaints (617-567-3333) at any hour of the day or night. Those calling should give their name and address so each concern is recorded. Callers will receive a copy of the complaint and may also request a copy be sent to their elected representatives.

"The task force feels looking into the impacts of jet traffic over the South Shore and the proposed new runway should be major agenda items for South Shore politicians," Engelhart said. "It's a regional issue."

State representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) and Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) have already voiced strong opposition to the additional runway.

Help light the night at Relay for Life

Residents can help light the night for walkers in the American Cancer Society's (ACS) 21-hour Relay For Life in Cohasset by sponsoring a candle lantern (luminaria). Candles are placed in luminaria bags bearing the names of those who have or have had cancer. When lit, hundreds of luminarias create an impressive symbol of hope and a heartfelt reminder of how cancer touches us all.

Cohasset High School will host the Relay For Life from 3 p.m. Friday, June 9, through noon Saturday, June 10. The Relay will feature teams of walkers who will walk, relay style, around the track for 21 hours to raise funds for the American Cancer Society. At 9 p.m. Friday, June 9, a luminaria ceremony will add personal tributes and remembrance to the efforts of hundreds of walkers, many of whom have themselves been touched by cancer.

Candle lanterns for the ceremony can be purchased for a contribution of $5 or more, according to Craig Bleicken, chair of the Relay For Life planning committee.

"We will be walking on June 9 and 10 because we have a hope that cancer will ultimately be controlled," Bleicken said. "The luminaria ceremony will honor those who currently have cancer, those who have beaten it, and those we have lost."

Luminarias can be purchased prior to the Relay, or at the event. For information about purchasing a luminaria, call Anna Mary Stewart at 545-0244.

In addition, cancer survivors are invited to take part in special activities. If you are a cancer survivor, call Karen Burns at 781-331-5226 to find out about Cohasset's survivorship plans. You do not need to be a part of a team to be involved with Relay For Life.

Corporate Sponsors for the Relay include the Red Parrot Restaurant and the Red Lion Inn and Atlantica.

The Cohasset Mariner is proud to be the media sponsor for the American Cancer Society's fourth annual Cohasset Relay For Life

Teen sustains head injuries in bicycle-car accident

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A 17-year-old Cohasset youth who allegedly rode his bike through a stop sign at the intersection of Forest, King and North Main streets and crashed into a car Saturday afternoon was taken by helicopter to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston where he is listed in guarded to fair condition.

Officer William Quigley said Seanian "Sean" O'Hara, 354 North Main St., had serious visible injuries to his head. He said police received multiple 9-1-1 calls about the accident that occurred about 5:30 p.m.

"He was coming down North Main southbound (toward the village) on the wrong side of the road," Quigley said. "In other words, he was travelling against the traffic."

Quigley said O'Hara apparently disregarded the stop sign and ended up crashing into the side of a 1992 Saab that was ¾ of the way into the intersection.

He explained that O'Hara apparently jammed on the breaks and was thrown over the handlebars of his bicycle and went head first into the side of the car between the driver's door and the front fender.

O'Hara was treated at the scene by Cohasset police and fire personnel. Paramedics from South Shore Hospital met the fire department up the street. Paramedics determined the injuries warranted O'Hara, who is a student at South Shore High School, being flown to Boston and called MedFlight, Quigley said.

The ambulance met the MedFlight helicopter at Milliken Field where a youth soccer game was going on. Police secured the landing zone.

Quigley said police would not be citing the teenager.

"He is in enough trouble," Quigley said about the injuries.

"A helmet would have helped him a lot," he said. "And those on bicycles must obey the traffic rules."

Police arrest four on cocaine charges

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset had a first last week but it was nothing to brag about.

"This is our first hit on crack cocaine ever to my knowledge," Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "It's here in Cohasset."

Cohasset police made four arrests at 12:30 a.m. Sunday in the vicinity of Jerusalem Road and Hull Street after an investigation that led to a 27-year-old Hull man allegedly selling crack cocaine to an undercover police officer.

Police believe the group had been operating a drug distribution network in the area for sometime.

The suspects traveled to Cohasset by taxi cab, police said. Also arrested was the driver of the cab whom police believe knew that a drug transaction was about to take place.

"Police believe the group had been operating a drug distribution network in the area for sometime," Cohasset police stated in a press release.

The following were arrested and subsequently arraigned on the charges in Quincy District Court on Monday. They were all released on personal recognizance. A pretrial conference is slated for July 24.

Police charged Martin J. Campbell, 27, of 22 T St., Hull, and Shakwan T. Burnett, 17, of 80 Caruth St., Dorchester, with distribution of a Class D substance (crack cocaine) and conspiracy to violate the controlled substance act. Also arrested and charged with conspiracy to violate the controlled substance act were Elizabeth Sanfilippo, 18, of 79 Fuller St., Dorchester, and Paul Waters, 40, of 107 Washington St., Pembroke.

Although this is the first arrest on crack cocaine charges, Cohasset police said they have seen more crack cocaine in the area in recent months.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

Blood drive

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, June 14. The blood drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main and Summer streets from 2-7 p.m. As in the past, babysitting will be provided from 3-5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset. According to Cathy Pray, director, "Only five out of every 100 people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year. First time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate. "The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," said Pray. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive."

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh more than 100 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset, so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 800-448-3543.

Dog obedience

The Cohasset Recreation Department is now accepting registrations for dog obedience classes, under the direction of Happy-Dog Training School.

Classes will begin Monday, June 26, at 6 p.m. for beginners and 7 p.m. for intermediates, and all classes are held on the Cohasset Town Common. Classes are five weeks in duration and the cost is $80 for the once a week, one-hour class.

The beginner class will teach basic obedience and responsible ownership to novice pet owners. The intermediate class is designed for dogs who have completed the recreation department's beginners class. Dog owners are required to have their dogs up to date with shots/inoculations.

To register, call the recreation department office at 383-4109.

Family fun-raiser

Join the Cohasset Swim Center on June 24, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. (raindate June 25) as it splashes into the 2000 season with a fun-filled day. Fund-raising events include water sports, a family cookout, bake walk, membership raffles and a huge yard sale. Come with your family and with an appetite. Grill chefs will be ready to serve you. Proceeds to be used for such projects as a shade structure and perimeter expansion.

Please help support your swim center. Donations needed: yard sale items can be dropped off at the swim center on June 10 and June 17 between 8 a.m. and noon. Helpful if items are tagged. Please no clothing. Wrapped baked goods also needed on the day of the event.

For more information, call Trish Fortin, 383-2025; baked goods call Andrea Martone, 383-9791.

Send us your news

The Cohasset Mariner welcomes information on local stories The deadline for submitting community copy is 8 a.m., Friday for the following week's issue. Letters and obituaries will be accepted until noon, Tuesday. Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St., sent by fax to 741-2931 or emailed to mford@cnc.com. A passion for pastels

Duxbury Art Association hosts unique exhibition

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

It's all about pastels.

On June 11, the Duxbury Art Association will open an extensive pastel painting exhibition at its home base at the Ellison Center for the Arts. The free exhibition will run from June 12 through Aug. 25.

Gallery coordinator Dorothy Mohn reminds the public there will be an opening reception on Sunday, June 11 from 2 to 4 p.m. for the show which includes the work of six local and well-known artists.

Donna Rossetti-Bailey and Margaret Farrell Bruno of Marshfield have work in the show along with Patricia Gray of Norwell, Anne Heywood of Bridgewater, Allison Krajcik of Easton, and Jane Lincoln of Falmouth.

"Many of these artists have been exhibiting in our shows for years," Mohn said. "But this is the first show we've had in which

Clockwise: "October" and other works by Norwell pastel artist Patricia M. Gray will be on display at the Ellison Center for the Arts. Artist Margaret Farrell Bruno's work including "Nantucket Road" will be on display in the Duxbury Art Association's Pastel exhibit opening June 11 and running through the end of August. Marshfield painter Donna Rossetti-Bailey has also contributed to the Duxbury Art Association show with works like "Rexhame Dunes" and "Standish Shores."

The Four Bitchin' Babes back at Company Theatre

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Debi Smith, Megon McDonough, Camille West and Sally Fingerett lead normal family lives, but they're always bitchin.'

The four make up the popular and humorous folk music act The Four Bitchin' Babes and they'll be back on the South Shore next week playing two shows at Norwell's Company Theatre. The Babes hail from different parts of the country, but get together so often to tour and work on albums. They've already released three.

"The Babes," as they are otherwise known, will play the Company Theatre June 16 and 17.

"Life according to Four Bitchin' Babes is a glorious musical ride through the heart. Join them as they take you on a journey through the joys and dilemmas of love and everyday life." So says a passage describing the Babes on their website.

The Babes' music is frequently laced with humor, as they sing musically extravagant numbers with titles like "Viagra in the Waters," "Toe to Toe With the HMO," and "The Body is a Car." But their music also has a sensitive side, and the Babes will be the first to admit that.

"We're all happy now. We all feel we work well together. We're actually four pretty funny women."
The Four Bitchin' Babes band member Megon McDonough

Living in different states, makes touring together a challenge, but it's one the Babes are up for.

"The hardest part of our job is traveling," said Chicago resident Megon McDonough "But it's a necessary entity. It just comes with the territory. Luckily, we all married the right men." McDonough's bandmates include Sally Fingerett (guitar, piano, vocals) who lives in Ohio, Debi Smith (guitar, vocals, Irish drum) a Washington, D.C. resident and and Camille West (guitar, tap dancing) of New York.

Before the foursome were actually a band, they all had solo careers. Each of them have recorded material on their own. Fingerett and McDonough have been with the Babes since they were put together by Christine Lavin about ten years ago. During the last decade the Babes have had other members including Boston singer Patty Larkin and Julie Gold, who wrote Bette Middler's "From A Distance."

McDonough said Gold was not wild about traveling, so she eventually left the band, as did Larkin. Even Lavin decided to call it quits after a while. But according to the Babes, none of the departures were hostile.

McDonough said she and Fingerett made the group a foursome again by recruiting

Going ... going ... gone?

A new documentary looks at the colorful history of Fenway Park

By Ed Symkus
STAFF SENIOR ARTS WRITER

At a time when the future existence of Fenway Park is in question — Will there be money for a new park? Will they fix up the one we have now? — a new film has just been completed that's going to make people stop thinking about what Fenway could be and get them to realize what a colorful, intimate and fan-friendly place the 88-year-old stadium has always been.

There could be no more apt title for a film about the home of the Red Sox than the alliterative "Fabulous Fenway: America's Legendary Ballpark." And, it turns out, the Curse of the Bambino isn't limited to the team's struggles to attain the World Series championship. The film's producer-writer, Lorie Conway, a longtime Sox fan, had a hellish time getting the project made.

"Since day one, producing this film, we have had everything that could go wrong go wrong," says Conway, who has worked in news, programming and film at a number of television stations around town for the past 20 years. "The Red Sox didn't want to cooperate with us. And when we called Major League Baseball to buy highlight footage, they wouldn't sell it to us. That's how far the tentacles of the Red Sox power goes."

Conway has come up with a number of reasons she believes the Red Sox organization didn't want to give her access to the park or any of the current roster of players. Their answer to her was that they like to prohibit independents from doing anything. Her theories range from them wanting to look forward instead of backward to the probability that they were too involved in the political maneuvering required to finance a new park to be bothered with anything else.

"And," she adds, "the Red Sox wanted us to relinquish editorial control to them without putting any kind of money into the project, and then wanted a back end of the sales of the video. So that part didn't make sense to us."

A call to the Red Sox press office resulted in a different explanation from Dick Bresciani, vice president of public affairs for the team, who said, "We received a letter last September about the film and they wanted to come in and do stuff at Fenway. But this was just prior to the playoffs. Elaine Stewart, our assistant general manager, got back to them and advised them on the procedures on putting together a video like this. They needed clearance from Major League Baseball for certain footage and licensing rights. She gave them the right channels, and we said we didn't have time during the playoffs to work on this."

But Conway, who admits to rooting for her home team, the Cleveland Indians, when they're not playing against the Red Sox, was determined to make a commemorative film about the Sox and the stadium that's been their home since 1912. She started contacting former players, including Carl Yastrzemski, Bill Lee, Jim Lonborg, Johnny Pesky, Frank Malzone and Dick Radatz, as well as former announcers Curt Gowdy and Ken Coleman. She even tracked down big time Sox fan Kevin Costner. All of these folks, and a few more, gladly shared their memories of playing for, working for and rooting for the team and of Fenway Park.

But the film is much more than a reminiscence. Conway got together with Mike Barnicle, an even bigger fan than Costner, who was eventually hired to write the script, much of which is a baseball lore-drenched history of the Boston franchise dating back to when the home team was known as the Pilgrims in 1901. Barnicle also narrates the film.

"I did the first draft of the script which contained the historical information and the baseball information," says Conway. "But Mike is an expert when it comes to that so he rewrote the majority of it in his own, what I call Barniclese. Then I sat with my editor and we crafted the film together."

The result is a major league package of entertaining and informative sports moments throughout the century. There are the stories of how and why Babe Ruth was sold to the Yankees, the tragedy of Tony Conigliaro, the batting heroics of Ted Williams and more. The archival footage of Williams — wearing number 9 — is among the film's most exciting segments.

The legendary swing of Ted Williams

"I was really pleased that came together," says Conway. "My business partner, Tory Vallely, searched high and low for footage people hadn't seen before or at least didn't feel so familiar. Not having the Major League Baseball footage in there, we really wanted to make the archival stuff stunning. And I think she pulled that off."

Although there are a lot of talking heads in the film, Conway and Vallely did indeed do a fine job in finding other archival footage of the team and the park in the good old days. And there are plenty of great stories — such as why there's one red seat amidst a sea of green seats in the grandstands, exactly 512 feet from home plate — to keep viewers' minds occupied. And the film clocks in nicely at 48 minutes.

"From a programming standpoint, I knew that we needed to keep it under an hour so people could broadcast it," says Conway, still a TV person at heart. "We did have an air date with Channel 5 , but they yanked it on us. We were one signature away from a final contract when I learned that Paul LaCamera decided not to air it. We were very disappointed."

When contacted, LaCamera, president and general manager of the station, said, "I always anticipated that the issue of the new park would be resolved one way or the other. I didn't think it was appropriate to show the film while the public debate was continuing."

And what does Conway think of the new park versus old park argument?

"Well, I sat there many times long enough to know that Fenway is in need of some serious repair," she says. "I've sat in those little seats. I love the quaintness of the park. But I also know that as a businesswomen struggling to make money in documentaries, that there are economic pressures on the organization to do what they need to do, to maintain a competitive team. Yet I only hope that they build it for the people that love the Red Sox and love the experience of going to the park, and they do not build it for corporate clients and sky box dollars. Because if that's the case, then they have failed all of us and they've also failed the history and the integrity of that history that has made Fenway so fantastic.

"Fabulous Fenway: America's Legendary Ballpark" screens at the Boston Public Library on June 15 at 6:30 p.m. There's no charge. The film is also being sold at retail stores and on the website www.fabulousfenway.com.

Make mine minestrone

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I have made at least a dozen different recipes for minestrone, and the vast majority of them exhibited very little flavor indeed. Maybe fresh Italian vegetables have a lot more flavor than our rather dull supermarket varieties, but who wants to assemble a soup of 20 ingredients only to find that it tastes like pasta water?

To refresh my memory, I made soups from "Essentials of Classic Italian Cooking" (Knp[f, 1992), "Trattoria Cooking" (IDG, 1992), and "The New Joy of Cooking" (Scribner, 1997). I used different combinations of onion, pancetta, carrot, celery, potato, cabbage, spinach, tomato, green beans, dried beans, water, chicken stock, beef stock, zucchini, Parmesan rind, parsley and olive oil and was disappointed in the results (although the recipe from "Trattoria Cooking" was the best). My conclusions were that pancetta was crucial for flavor, that green beans and zucchini add nothing, that dried beans are vastly better than canned (dried beans add a creaminess to the soup) and that soups using just water and no stock have little flavor.

In addition to the pancetta, dried beans and chicken stock, I liked olive oil, onion, carrot, celery, garlic, rosemary, Savoy cabbage and potato — a manageable ingredient list. To make the soup, I started with 4 tablespoons of olive oil and 4 ounces of pancetta. I browned the pancetta then added the onion, celery, and carrot and softened them for about 5 minutes. Next, I added the garlic and cooked the mixture for an additional 2 minutes. In went the beans, stock, tomato and rosemary. I let this mixture simmer for 45 minutes (or until the beans were soft but not totally cooked) then added the cabbage and potato and let the soup cook for 20 minutes more.

This soup was my hands-down favorite, but it still needed work. First, the beans were tough because I added the tomato too soon. (I have found that dried beans cook very slowly in an acidic liquid.) Next time, I added the tomato later in the process — with the cabbage and potato — and the beans were more tender. I had started with a full cup of beans but knocked that back to 2/3 cup, a better quantity to serve eight as a main course. I tried substituting both bacon and salt pork for the pancetta but liked neither, although the lean portion of salt pork will do in a pinch. It turned out that garlic was also important to flavor development (no surprise here), even though I intended to add freshly made pesto as a garnish. Fresh rosemary also boosted the flavor nicely.

For the tomato, I had better luck mincing whole tomatoes packed in their own juices than using Muir Glen diced tomatoes, since the latter consists of rather large pieces. (Use Muir Glen or Progresso canned tomatoes — never use tomatoes packed in purée, which have a processed "cooked" flavor.) Savoy cabbage is not a new ingredient in minestrone, but it does add a lot of flavor. (Neither spinach nor Swiss chard contributed enough body.) I also liked the addition of a waxy red potato, which made this a real main course soup. It adds a hint of sweetness and also works well with the rosemary. Chicken stock is essential for flavor, although a ratio of 4 cups stock (I use Swanson's) to 2 cups water seemed right. This isn't, after all, a recipe for chicken soup. Many cooks, including those in my own test kitchen at Cook's Illustrated magazine, use Parmesan rind for flavoring. I prefer adding it grated as a garnish, finding the flavor of the rind cooked in the soup a bit overpowering.

Minestrone almost always uses pesto for flavoring and pasta for flavor and texture. I found that when added directly to the soup, the pesto lost some of its punch. I like its sweet, garlicky bite concentrated in a dollop on top of each serving. For the pasta, it is never a good idea to add it directly to the soup pot, since leftovers are then impossible. The pasta will swell like a children's sponge toy — in the morning, the pasta is ready to jump out of the pot! I cook it separately and add it to individual serving bowls. Leftover soup can then be stored safely.

Master recipe for hearty minestrone

If you want to skip the pesto, top off each serving with minced parsley on top of each serving and splash of fruity extra-virgin olive oil. The soup, pasta, and pesto keep well if covered and stored in the refrigerator (in separate containers, of course). The flavor of this soup improves the second day.

For the soup

1/4 cup olive oil
2 ounces pancetta or the lean meaty portion of salt pork, finely diced
1 medium onion or 2 medium leeks cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 cup
1 large or 2 medium carrots cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 cup
1 small celery rib cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1/3 cup
2 large or 3 medium cloves garlic, finely minced
2/3 cup dried cannellini or navy beans, rinsed and picked over
1 tablespoon fresh rosemary leaves, finely chopped
4 cups homemade or low-sodium chicken stock
2 cups water
1 28-ounce can whole tomatoes, diced
1/4 small head savoy cabbage core removed and thinly sliced, about 1/4 pound or 2 cups
2 cups red potatoes cut into a 3/4-inch dice, about 2 large or 8 small
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
4 ounces small soup-sized pasta such as ditalini, cooked, drained and tossed with 1 tablespoon olive oil
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese
Freshly ground black pepper

For the pesto

3 cups loosely packed basil leaves, washed thoroughly and picked over
1/2 cup extra virgin olive oil
2 medium cloves garlic, peeled and roughly chopped
1/4 cup pine nuts
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

1. Heat the olive oil in a large soup pot over medium heat. Add the pancetta or salt pork, and cook until slightly browned about 3 minutes. Add the leek or onion, carrot and celery and cook 5-7 minutes or until onion has softened but the vegetables are not browned. Add the garlic, and cook for another 2 minutes. Add the beans, rosemary, chicken stock and water, and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer. Cover and cook, stirring occasionally, for 45 minutes or until the beans have softened but are not completely cooked.

2. Add the tomatoes and their juices, the cabbage, the potatoes and salt, and simmer uncovered for another 20 minutes, stirring occasionally. Adjust seasonings adding pepper and more salt, if necessary.

3. For the pesto, place all ingredients except the cheese in the bowl of a food processor. Process until smooth, and transfer to a medium-sized bowl. Stir in the cheese and mix well.

4. Place about 2 tablespoons of the cooked pasta in the bottom of each soup bowl. (I find shallow soup plates work best for this recipe.) Ladle the hot soup into each bowl. Add a dollop (no more than a tablespoon) of pesto to the center of each bowl. Add a bit of freshly grated Parmesan and a couple grinds of pepper. Serve immediately.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

TUESDAY, JUNE 6

A Leo moon sets the stage for an upbeat day. The green light is on for new starts in your business or personal life. Go for the gold. Enjoy favorite sports, hobbies and friends this evening.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7

This is a day to finish projects already begun; review, redo, reorganize. At 6:22 a.m. the Leo moon aligns with Jupiter and becomes inactive. The moon enters detail-oriented Virgo at 2:57 p.m., prompting you to get back on track with diets, physical fitness regimens. Stock up on healthy foods and vitamins. Take better care of yourself.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8

Wake up in a good mood. Count your blessings instead of getting caught up in worries, negative thinking. A lunar alignment to Pluto this morning may generate emotional thunderstorms. Keep a low profile. Potentially difficult influences ease up in the afternoon, and the remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. Stay busy with practical projects. You can be most productive. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 11:29 p.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate next Friday, June 16.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9

Get an early start to this day. Influences rate high for productivity this morning. The moon continues its travel in Virgo, active until 11:48 a.m., when it aligns with Jupiter. There is a rough spot, however, at 11:36 a.m., when the moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Mars. Slow down. Sidestep arguments, irritability. Handle routine chores and errands this afternoon. At 7:59 p.m. the moon enters social Libra. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10

A Libra moon sets the stage for a weekend that tops the charts for partying and enjoying the good things in life. Influences also rate high for meeting people and beginning new relationships or strengthening the ties in existing partnerships. New starts across the board are recommended. Pull out all the stops. Applying alignments of the sun and Venus to Uranus prompt you to be more adventurous, spontaneous and open to new experiences.

SUNDAY, JUNE 11

Take advantage of mild and sunny astrological weather. Put career or domestic worries on the back burner. Concentrate on relaxing and recharging you batteries. Spend quality time with loved ones; open the doors to a higher level of communication. The Libra moon continues active travel until 10:14 p.m., when it aligns with Mars.

MONDAY, JUNE 12

Sidestep morning hassles or the blues. At 3:55 a.m. the moon enters Scorpio, generating a serious, intense mood. Choose your words carefully. The best way to channel today's influences is to keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. Projects that need repair, renovation, reconstruction get the green light. A lunar alignment to Neptune may bring a lull period mid-afternoon. Slow down. Follow your hunches.

Duxbury Art Association hosts unique exhibition

we've featured all pastels."

Mohn said the pastel event was spearheaded by Craig Bloodgood, a past curator for the Duxbury Art Association.

"To me, pastels have a lot of the lushness of oil paints, but they give a painter the opportunity to be spontaneous. They also give a painter the ability to work quickly."

Norwell artist Patricia Gray

Gray said pastel painting is different from most other kinds of painting in that unlike oil paints, pastels are more like crayons. Pastels come in a stick form, and do not require the use of a paintbrush.

"To me, pastels have a lot of the lushness of oil paints," Gray said, "but they give a painter the opportunity to be spontaneous. They also give a painter the ability to work quickly."

Gray said although she loves oil painting, she frequently works in pastels because they allow her to paint without a big fuss.

"With pastels, all you need is a piece of paper and the pastels you're working with," Gray said. "You can just pick up your (pastel) stick and immediately begin painting. I started using pastels about 25 years ago when I had my first child because I found I didn't have a whole lot of time to paint at that point. Pastels are quick, but there's still so much you can do with them."

Gray said many of Degas works were done in pastels, and they exhibit a great amount of texture, color, and richness.

"Pastels are just pure pigment in a stick," Gray said. "And pastel paintings last forever if they're taken care of."

Gray said she is excited about exhibiting her work in the show, and she has designed four new pieces specifically for the Duxbury exhibit.

Gray said she enjoys painting South Shore landscapes noting they offer local artists a great deal of inspiration.

Rossetti-Bailey agreed with Gray.

"My pieces are all South Shore landscapes," Rossetti-Bailey said. "I hope the people that come to this show will come away with a new appreciation of the wonders of the South Shore."

Rossetti-Bailey has been painting for many years and taught art classes at Rockland High School for 23 years.

"Pastels were always something I wanted to try out," she said. Rossetti-Bailey began taking pictures of landscapes around the South Shore, and created works based on the photos.

"Pastels are a dry medium," she said. "You don't need to mix them with anything, and that's part of their advantage. Pastels look basically like colored chalk but they have different degrees of hardness and softness."

Rossetti-Bailey said she feels honored to be participating in the upcoming art show because she said there are some very prestigious artists being featured.

"With my paintings, I'm hoping people can see a little piece of the world through my eyes," she said. "I'm really excited about this show because of the artists involved, and because it's just a great venue."

All of the artists involved in the show have different interpretations of what makes a good piece of artwork.

"It's something that evokes an emotion in a viewer," Rossetti-Bailey said. "Hopefully, people who come to the exhibition will look at the paintings and feel something, whether it's a good feeling or a bad one."

"The human spirit is important to a piece of art," Gray added. "It's not just a recording of what you see. It's something beyond that."

For more information on the upcoming pastel exhibition, call the Duxbury Art Association at (781) 934-2731 x15 or log onto their website at www.duxburyart.org.

The Four Bitchin' Babes back at Company Theatre

Smith and West, and she stressed there will be no more changes in the band's format.

"We're all happy now," McDonough said. "We all feel we work well together. We're actually four pretty funny women."

Massachusetts is a favorite tour stop for the Babes, said McDonough.

"Massachusetts is my favorite state. I'm not blowing smoke. Every time we get a chance to play in beautiful Massachusetts, we get psyched." She noted the band's most recent album called "Beyond Bitchin'" was recorded at a studio in western Massachusetts.

McDonough said she believes the band's latest album, which was only recently released, is the best they have ever done. Producer Jeff Bova, who has worked with Celine Dion may have had something to do with it, McDonough notes. "He has a great ear for music," she said.

Debi Smith, Megon McDonough, Camille West and Sally Fingerett are The Four Bitchin' Babes.

But nothing compares to the Babes' live performance.

McDonough said the group's live act goes in "rounds," that is, each member of the band gets a chance to show their stuff. She said many styles of music are represented by each member of the band. She said Smith typically does an opera-oriented solo piece and Fingerett does an acapella number. Of West, McDonough said "We never know what she is going to do onstage."

"We're all wacky in some way when we're live, but we definitely have our serious moments. When people see us we hear remarks like 'You guys really seem to be having fun up there.' It's not all 'ha-ha hee-hee,' though. You'll laugh, you'll cry, and you'll love it even more than "Cats," McDonough said.

Because of the fun they all have together, McDonough said writing songs is always an interesting process because each band member has their own way of going through the process.

"It'd different for everyone," she said. "For me, the lyric always comes first, then the melody. I let the poetry take me to the music. Other people in the band will write songs based on a given melody."

McDonough said West is an amazingly gifted songwriter with a great sense of humor. She said Smith and Fingerett are also excellent writers, but they offer up different styles.

"The most important thing to have during the writing process is a lot of M&Ms," she quipped.

"Beyond Bitchin'" has been receiving stellar reviews from various publications across the country, and copies of the album have been selling well.

Radio stations across the country are giving the band a significant amount of air time, and "Beyond Bitchin'" has been put on sale at Borders locations throughout the country.

"It's pretty cool for us," McDonough said. "We're really focusing all of our energy on this album." The band plans on doing another album but for now, they want to concentrate on promoting their most recent work., she noted.

"We've got a lot of confidence in this record," McDonough added. "People are listening to it. We feel there's a great healing power within music, and this is our opportunity to give that to the world."

McDonough said she is also satisfied with the turnouts the band gets at its shows, and she said audience members always have good comments for them.

"One of the things we always hear from various audience members is 'Why aren't you guys famous yet?,'" she said. "I simply tell them 'We're working on that.'"

Debut disc is sure bet for J Place

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"Life is a gamble and I'm betting on the blues," beckons J Place in the opening lines of the leadoff title track of his newly released, independently produced CD, Bettin' On the Blues.

Life may ultimately be a gamble, but the Cohasset-based blues singer/harpist is wagering a winning hand on this debut disc in front of a brand new, self-named band.

A little over a year ago, Josiah (AKA J, Nasty J) Place began breaking in his current quartet following the dissolution of his previous band, Nasty J & the Grinders, two years earlier. This was in part an attempt to get reoriented with the area blues club scene after a long between-bands layoff, and partly an effort to go deeper into the stylistic diversity of blues traditions than the Place would, or could do with the Grinders —a decidedly Chicago-style, Muddy Waters-influenced vehicle with a salacious edge.

With the new J Place Band, the leader hasn't abandoned Chicago or Muddy altogether. But the long-awaited 13-track disc offering, which appeared initially in an eight-song preview demo EP last summer, breaks loose and ventures over the rest of the American blues landscape too. From New Orleans and the Delta to Texas and the West Coast, the new release blends it all with a seamless cohesion that's more than impressive.

As it did with the Grinders, Place's vocal/harmonica style continues to combine the showmanship personality of another regionally-tied singer/harp-wailer James Montgomery, the rich, expressive harp-blowing sound of Little Walter, and a gritty, gravelly vocal tone which can be likened to Rick Estrin, frontman of the Sacramento-based, Alligator Records blues act Little Charlie & the Nightcats.

The new band — a trio of seasoned Boston-based players consisting of guitarist Bobby Gus, upright bassist Jacques Raymond and drummer Larry Takki, matches its frontman stride for stride and seems to convey multiple personalities in covering the eclectic, pan-regional musical territory.

The opening title cut gets things moving with a loose-mooded, shuffling good-time groove. The following track, the swing-dancing "Juke Jive & Grind," introduces the first of a clutch of stellar guest appearances throughout the disc, this one from Marshfield-based keyboard-wiz Bruce Katz on piano.

Katz surfaces again on the ivories on "Sour Mash Mama," a Place original that the singer/harpist describes as a John Lee Hooker tribute. And which, interestingly enough, follows a cover rendering of Hooker's own "That Boogie Stuff," showcasing a low-down boogie-shuffle with vocals to match and "Haw-Haw-Haw-Haw" refrains that'll remind listeners where ZZ Top found its concept for "La Grange" nearly three decades ago.

The other guest spots highlight the more explorative, experimental tracks. Wild-honking Boston-based saxman Gordon "Sax Gordon" Beadle and the Hot Tamale Brass Band whip up a joyously ragged second-line horn-section stomp on Place's New Orleans homage "Swingin' In Sin City." And Place and Boston blues/R&B chanteuse Toni Lynn Washington get intimate and seductive on the Delta-style, acoustic-backed duet "Grinding Time."

Place, who also covers the local blues scene as a moonlighting photographer, wails out generous servings of harpwork on all of the disc's tracks, alternating tastefully between Hohner Blues and Marine Band instruments. Place and his band also balance the reverent blues artistry and traditionalism with an assured intent on keeping the atmosphere loose in what could best be described as serious fun. You may, for instance, recognize the melodic sampling of J's harp solo on the swing-blues stomp "In the Night"

Other blues experiments pop up as well. The original "Who's Been Talking" sets a haunting, melancholy atmosphere to an odd 5/4 time rhythm, and the cover of Sonny Boy Williamson's "She Brought Life Back To the Dead," faithfully recreates the scrappy harp-powered groove that Sonny Boy later brought to wider recognition with his classic "Nine Below Zero."

With his former band The Grinders, and in his former character guise as Nasty J, Place issued one independent CD, 1996's High Temperature, which generated a surprising amount of local airplay and sales and eventually found its way into jukeboxes all over the east coast. With his new band and disc, the artist formerly known as Nasty J believes he's progressed and matured as a blues player and the result is an even better disc effort.

Will it net the same kind of recognition as the Nasty J & the Grinders disc? It's a gamble but J's betting on it.

(The J Place Band is celebrating the release of Bettin' On the Blues with CD-release parties at Mount Blue Restaurant, Route 123, Norwell, on June 10 at 9 p.m., and at the Purple Eggplant Cafe, Route 18, Abington, on June 17 at 9:30 p.m. For more information, call Place Productions at 617 338-8314.)

Bay State home sales slow, demand remains strong

Single-family home sales slowed across Massachusetts in the first quarter of 2000 as rising interest rates and a sharp drop in the inventory of homes for sale tempered market activity, especially among first-time buyers, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR). Sales of detached single family homes fell 12.1 percent during the quarter, from 9,280 units in the first three months of 1999 to 8,155 in the same period this year, and condominium sales declined 3.9 percent, from 2,420 units in the first quarter last year to 2,325 in the same quarter of 2000.

Despite the slower sales pace, housing demand remains at healthy levels in most market areas, MAR officials said. "Across the state, there appears to be no shortage of buyers, but in many instances they're having to modify or extend their home search due to a limited supply of listings or today's higher mortgage rates," stated MAR president Fred Meyer. "The strong economy has consumers feeling confident and enthusiastic to make a major purchase like a new home," he added.

As confirmation of the brisk market activity, the MAR data show that the 10,480 detached single-family homes and condos sold from January-March, 2000 is the second highest first quarter residential sales total on record in the Bay State, surpassed only by the 11,700 single-family properties sold in the first quarter of 1999.

"This cool down in home sales was not completely unexpected given the fact we're coming off four consecutive years of record-breaking sales volume," Meyer observed. "It's unrealistic to think the market could sustain unprecedented sales growth indefinitely. I think a slightly slower sales pace may actually benefit the market, and I'm hopeful more opportunities will open up as new housing stock gets built, so depleted inventory can be replenished."

During the first quarter, sales of detached single-family homes decreased in all seven regions of Massachusetts, but four market areas — West (-6.3 percent), Northeast (-8.1 percent), Cape Cod and islands (-8.5 percent) and Central/Worcester County (-9.1 percent) — saw only modest declines that were less than the statewide rate of decrease. Separately, condo sales improved during the first quarter over year-ago levels across the Cape and islands and the state's four western-most counties and were essentially flat in the Central region, declining by just four units. Elsewhere, condominium sales slipped 6-9 percent in the Northeast, South Shore and Greater Boston areas, while plunging 47 percent in southeastern Massachusetts due to a lack of inventory.

"This is a housing market that is still very strong," Meyer asserted.

"Across the state, there appears to be no shortage of buyers, but in many instances they're having to modify or extend their home search due to a limited supply of listings or today's higher mortgage rates."

Fred Meyer MAR president

"With the unemployment rate low, large numbers of companies are for workers and that's providing a steady influx of new buyers. In addition, we're still seeing plenty of activity from young executives and older empty-nesters who have made significant money at their high-tech jobs or from stock and mutual fund investments. They're now eager and able to buy their dream home."

Generally speaking, the market has not felt much impact from recent interest rate increases, but some entry-level buyers are feeling the pinch from the 1 1/3 point rise in the average 30-year fixed mortgage rate (8.32 percent — first quarter 2000 vs. 6.93 percent — first quarter 1999) this past year. "The recent rate hikes have been more of an inconvenience than a deterrent to most home buyers," Meyer said "After all, today's rates are much lower than the 10- to 13-percent average we saw in the mid-80s."

Presently, a greater concern to housing market observers is the deficiency in available inventory to meet buyer demand. Last winter inventory was down 6.1 percent from the first quarter of 1998, but this year single-family listings for the first three months of 2000 numbered 27,043, a 22-percent decline from the 34,638 listing in the first quarter of 1999.

"When inventory is tight, competition among buyers increases and can often lead to selling prices at or above asking price. That puts upward pressure on home prices, which is what we're seeing now in some areas," Meyer explained.

The MAR report specifically found that the statewide average selling price for detached single-family homes rose 18.6 percent during the past 12 months, from an average price of $225,063 in the first quarter a year ago to $266,925 in the first three months of 2000. Similarly, the statewide average selling price for condominiums has increased 18.2 percent, from an average price of $139,104 in the first quarter of 1999 to $164,479 in the comparable period this year.

Also driving the increase in first-quarter average selling prices, according to Meyer, has been a steady increase in the sale of luxury homes and second home properties throughout the state. The MAR report found sales of upper-end homes priced at or above $500,000 have risen 26 percent in the first quarter of 2000 over the same period of last year, while the sale of low- to moderately-priced single-family homes of $300,000 or less declined 12.2 percent during the same period.

Regionally, all areas saw an increase in average selling price of detached homes in the first quarter with the most modest price gains occurring in the communities of Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden, Hampshire and Worcester counties. Meanwhile, average selling prices for condos rose in all areas except the South Shore and Southeastern Massachusetts.

Sales and price data from the MAR report reflects transactions occurring through Realtor-affiliated multiple listing services in the state and account for approximately 60 percent of all real estate sales in Massachusetts.

IN BRIEF

Realtor of the Year

County Board of Realtors presented the Realtor of the Year Award to Betsy Currier, past president of the board of directors, current regional vice president of Massachusetts Association of Realtors. The award is given to a member of the realtor association who exemplifies leadership skills over a period of time in his or her local association, state and national association of realtors, and in their community.

David Drinkwater, first vice president of Massachusetts Association of Realtors, past president of the PCBR and past recipient of the Realtor of the Year Award, presented the award with Donna Wood, current president. "I have worked with Betsy during the years and found that she embraced every task with equal leadership skills and hard work," Drinkwater said.

Currier has been the recipient of the President's Award, the Outstanding Service Award, and the Leadership Award. She chaired several committees, including the state's Agency Committee, is a certified real estate instructor, and is sales manager for DeWolfe in Hingham. "The opportunities as a volunteer at the Plymouth County Board of Realtors surpass many others, as there is no fractious atmosphere here, we work together. The caliber of leadership is very high, which encourages a good chance to mentor," said Currier.

Area residents complete real estate course

Karen Bayha of Marshfield and Tammy Irrera of Hanover recently completed a five-week course on the fundamentals of real estate sales at the Conway Country School of Real Estate.

Those interested in becoming licensed real estate agents can take the 25 hours of coursework to meet the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' requirements prior to taking the salesperson's licensing exam. Students of the Conway Country School of Real Estate also have access to professional career counseling to discuss joining the Conway sales team, although enrolling in the prelicensing class does not obligate students to work for Conway.

Tuition is $180 and the classes are held at the Hanover campus (at the intersection of Routes 53 and 139) Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9:30 p.m. The next class starts July 11 and runs through Aug. 10. For more information on this or future courses, call (781) 826-0088.

The Conway Country School of Real Estate is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co., which has more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

No pets means no pets

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

No one is above the law. Adherence to this concept is what protects us all from arbitrary and autocratic treatment. Our nation's Constitution insures us all equal protection under the law. As justice is blind, the law theoretically applies equally to the rich as well as the poor, the powerful as well as the meek. This noble concept was tested, in the Superior Court Case of Park Village West v. Sugar.

Background

Park Village West (Plaintiff) is a Cooperative Corporation consisting of approximately 250 apartments and located in Westborough.

Cooperative form living is unique in that you do not purchase or own your unit. The unit is owned by the cooperative corporation. What you purchase is shares of stock in the cooperative and a lease which allows you to reside indefinitely in the unit provided you pay the monthly rent and comply with the rules of the cooperative.

The Sugars acquired unit V-1, in the cooperative on June 25, 1987. At that time they were provided with and signed a lease for the unit. Among other things, the lease contained the rules of the cooperative which stated in part: "The lessee (Sugars) hereby covenants to comply with all such house rules and to see that they are faithfully observed... Breach of the house rules shall be a default under this lease."

4. On July 22, 1986, the cooperative board of directors amended the house rules, one of which stated: "No dogs allowed unless registered on or before July 22, 1986. Action will be taken to remove all unauthorized pets. If the lessee (Sugar) shall at anytime be in default hereunder, and if lessor (Park Village West) shall incur any expense... in action or proceeding, the expense to the lessor, including reasonable attorney fees, shall be paid by the lessee to the lessor.

Well, the pet restriction seems pretty clear doesn't it? Some people think rules are only for the other guy because in March of 1995, the Sugars acquired a Shi-Tzu dog. This dog was never registered or approved by the cooperative board.

The line in the sand was drawn when the cooperative notified the Sugars that the Shi-Tzu would have to vamoose. When the Sugars refused, the cooperative brought an action in Worcester Superior Court, seeking an order to remove the offending Shi-Tzu, plus attorneys fees of $13,000. The Sugars' numerous defenses including grandfather protection, unreasonable restrictive rules, extreme emotional distress, abuse of process, defamation, retaliatory eviction, and selective enforcement, were all offhandedly dismissed by the court.

Discussion of the law

Since the Sugars chose to live in cooperative housing, they were subject to the rules properly mandated and within the authority of the board. Since the pet restriction was a reasonable exercise of the discretion granted to the board of directors, it was immaterial whether the Sugars knew of the restriction or whether the dog was a nuisance. The Sugars along with all other cooperative owners are subject to the pet restrictions.

Decision

The Sugars have 60 days to remove the Shi-Tzu and are ordered to pay attorneys' fees in the amount of $13,704

As a cooperative owner, you are subject to the rules passed by the Board. NO PETS means NO PETS. If you buy a dog, you run the risk of losing your pet plus fines, attorneys fees, and costs. Defiance of the rules can also result in termination of your lease (i.e. eviction).

Designing a perennial border

PART II
PLANNING AND PREPARING THE SITE

The development of a particular garden theme could be yet another consideration when planning a new garden. Owners of antique or Victorian-style homes may wish to research and develop a garden appropriate to the period of their dwellings.

A thoughtfully planned, well-designed garden can be a perennial pleasure m all seasons and the springtime of the year is an excellent time to undertake this rewarding project. Dedicated gardeners, who have spent the winter months browsing through catalogs and books, have the energy and enthusiasm to dig right in, but before you grab your spade and pitchfork, considerable thought should be given to the type of garden you wish to create. The key words are plan and prepare and if put into practice, you will save substantial time, energy and expense.

A garden design should be a reflection of a gardener's personal style and taste, just as each home has its own unique interior design. Most successful garden designs tend to match the style of the adjacent home. If your home has a formal appearance with symmetrically laid out foundation plantings, rectangular beds with straight edges will most likely suit your taste. A cottage garden, where the emphasis is on bountiful color throughout the season with less attention given to color-coordination or plant height, might be perfect alongside a country Cape. Somewhere in between these two are informal beds and borders with curved edges and irregular shapes.

The development of a particular garden theme could be yet another consideration when planning a new garden. For those who spend their summers elsewhere, a seasonal garden with primarily spring- and fall-flowering bulbs and perennials might be preferred. Owners of antique or Victorian-style homes may wish to research and develop a garden appropriate to the period of their dwellings. A naturalistic woodland or wildflower garden might best suit a predominantly shady site. Herb and fragrance gardens, a garden to attract butterflies and hummingbirds or a water garden are additional possibilities. Each of these gardens has its own specific requirements for soil, light and plant selection. Take time to research the particular needs of these specialized theme gardens to ensure success.

The form of the traditional perennial border tends to be long and narrow and is often set against the backdrop of a fence, stone wall, hedge or building. Plants are typically arranged with the taller varieties toward the back of the border graduating to shorter specimens in the front. In elongated beds which have access from only one side, a depth of 4- to 5-feet is ideal to enable the gardener to place one foot into the middle of the border to tend to the back of the garden when weeding and deadheading are needed. 203K loans

By Robert Segal
SALES MANAGER BROCKTON CREDIT UNION

If you are thinking about buying that property that needs a little work and you don't have the money set aside to do it, don't worry, the FHA 203K loan (the K loan) may be the program for you. Like its sister program, the 203B, the K loan allows you to get into a property with as little as 3 percent down. Better still, the K loan lets you finance most of the cost to fix up the house .

This purchase/renovation loan enables you to obtain a single mortgage to pay for the purchase and renovation of a home, rather than getting two separate mortgages — one for the purchase of the home and the second (at a higher interest rate) to pay for the renovation work.

In addition, the maximum size of a purchase/renovation loan is based on the appraised value of the home after the improvements or renovations have been made — called the "after-completed" value. The result is a larger possible mortgage. In many cases, you may borrow well over $200,000. Moreover, the K loans are not restricted to single family properties. Condominiums and multi-families are also eligible. For condominiums, the property must be owner-occupied and rehabilitation is limited to the interior of the unit. Under this program, you may also convert a single family dwelling to a two- or three-family home.

Robert Segal

The minimum amount of repairs you must undertake is $5,000. Minor or cosmetic repairs by themselves are unacceptable; however, they may be added to the minimum requirement. Eligible improvements include structural alterations and reconstruction, changes for modernization (remodeled bathrooms and kitchens), elimination of safety hazards, changes for aesthetic appeal (new exterior siding or adding a second story to the home), and installation of a septic system. The K loans contain three provisions concerning the timeliness of the work. The work must begin within 30 days, the work must not cease prior to completion for more than 30 consecutive days, and the work must be completed within six months.

To cover unexpected cost increases, a contingency reserve of 10 percent is generally required. For more extensive remodeling, the reserve is higher, up to 20 percent.

This purchase/renovation loan enables you to obtain a single mortgage to pay for the purchase and renovation of a home, rather than getting two separate mortgages — one for the purchase of the home and the second (at a higher interest rate) to pay for the renovation work.

The lender will release funds for payment to the contractor as the work progresses. As many as five releases (four plus a final) can be scheduled. An inspection is always required with a scheduled release; however inspections may be scheduled more often than if necessary to ensure compliance with local codes and ordinances.

Since the property may not be habitable until your work is completed, FHA allows you to finance up to six months of mortgage payments in the loan amount. In addition to the payments and cost of construction, FHA also allows you to finance the contingency reserve and many of the fees associated with the loan, such as inspection fees.

A contractor is not required to do the work, however, if you want to do any work or be the general contractor, you must be qualified to do the work, and do it in a timely and workmanlike manner. It is very important that the work be done within the required time frames. A borrower doing their own work can only be paid for the cost of the materials. Monies saved can be allocated to cost overruns or additional improvements.

Also important to the process is the role of the consultant, or plan review inspector. He or she will visit the site with you and the contractor to ensure compliance with the program. The consultant reviews the architectural drawings to ensure compliance with FHA requirements, ensure all health and safety items have been properly noted, and inspect the repairs to make sure the work is completed as designed. For this service, the inspector charges just under $1,000.

Say you are looking at a house costing $115,000 and needs $11,000 in repairs. Assuming you finance the contingency reserve and inspection fees, and you are paying normal closing costs and move in right away; then you may borrow about $124,000 and put down merely $5,000 in total. For many people, the K loan changes a "no" to a "YES."

ders should have stepping stones strategically placed to minimize continuously walking on the soil surface which can lead to compaction. In recent years, free-standing borders and raised island beds have become increasingly popular. Free-form islands present more of a challenge when determining the arrangement of plants as they are viewed from all sides, but if taller plants are placed down the middle of garden with shorter plants around the perimeter, the effect can be quite dramatic.

Once the site, style and form of your new garden have been determined, the task of physically preparing the garden begins. A tape measure, stakes and twine are useful tools for laying out the straight lines of a formal garden. The irregular shapes and curvilinear edges of informal beds, borders and islands can be created by using a garden hose as a design implement; its length and flexibility are ideal for manipulating and visualizing the form you desire. Step back, scrutinize your proposed plot, preferably from several angles including from within your home, and keep moving the hose until the form is appealing. Use gradual, gentle curves rather than sharply scalloped edges. A light dusting of lime can be applied along the final outline to allow you to remove the hose and begin digging.

Surface weeds and grass will have to be removed either chemically or physically. Nonspecific herbicides like Roundup or Finale efficiently kill all vegetation in a few week's time and the area can be planted shortly thereafter. Another method is to cover the proposed site with plastic if it is located in a sunny area; the heat generated during the day will kill the underlying plant material in a few weeks. The quickest, surest way to eliminate the surface growth often requires a strong back to remove sod and weeds with a spade or pitchfork. This method allows immediate preparation of the soil for the introduction of plant material and the discarded vegetation makes an ideal foundation for a compost pile.

Avoid the temptation to just rotor-till surface grass and weeds under as these may come back to haunt you later.

Join the Hingham Garden Club for its annual plant sale, Saturday, June 3, on the Common at Hingham Center from 9 a.m. until noon. Wildflowers, ground covers, shrubs, porch plants and perennials will be offered for sale as well as plant theme tables and demonstrations.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Four college pals get together to try to salvage one of their romances.

Road Trip (C+)

Gross-out movies are many people's guilty pleasures. Who will ever think the same of hair gel after seeing "There's Something About Mary," or about certain food items after seeing "American Pie," or, to get to our lesson today, about French toast, after seeing "Road Trip." In this one a poor sap, gently complaining about the powdered sugar on his breakfast French toast, asks the waiter to do something about it. The waiter does something about it. Enough said.

"Road Trip" offers moviegoers moments of snickering, a belly laugh or two, maybe three, to be generous about it, lots of giggling and some healthy "yuck!" responses, as when one of the characters, Barry (Tom Green), who dearly loves to watch a dorm mate's python devour a mouse, finds a satiated snake uninterested in another snack and so begins to eat the live mouse himself. If that's a phony mouse I'm a monkey's uncle. It's a real mouse, honest, and the bit is disgusting. (And funny.) And, by the way, we learn mid-way through the movie that Barry, who narrates the action to a group visiting his campus at the university of Ithaca, is surnamed Manilow. It's a throw-away line - there are many in the film - and has no connection to the real Barry Manilow.

The theme here is not original. Our hero, Josh (Breckin Meyer), realizes that his roommate has accidentally mailed the wrong videocassette to his, Josh's, girlfriend at the University of Austin. He had meant to send one expressing his love, but the one sent includes scenes of him shagging another girl. (How did we express our love to our honeys before video came along?) So, Josh decides to hightail it to Texas, two of his friends come along, and they convince the school nerd, a pencil-thin little geek named Kyle (DJ Qualls), to lend them his dad's car, which he will so long as he can come too. Hence: a road trip. Get it?

The boys wind up one night at a black fraternity, during whose party Kyle is devirginized by a black girl of generous proportions. They go to a sperm bank to raise funds for their voyage, and one of the pals, E.L. (Seann William Scott), learns something intense about erogenous zones that he hadn't known before. The other buddy on the trip, Rubin (Paulo Costanzo), a genius, of sorts, calculates that at a certain speed their car can catapult over a ravine and land safely on the other side, which it does, though not unscathed. Nothing these boys touch emerges fully unscathed along the road from Ithaca to Austin.

The tone throughout is "whatever." Nobody seems particularly bummed out by anything along the way, and somehow, though they've lost their clothing, they appear to be changing outfits in every scene. Do our heroes get to Austin in time to intercept the video? Does Josh manage to retain his one true love even though he has cheated? Does the deflowered geeky Kyle become a new man? Fair questions. Fair movie gives the answers.

Co-written (with Scott Armstrong) and directed by Todd Phillips.

Shanghai Noon (C+)

Spoofs of the Old West are legion, over the years from the near-classic "Blazing Saddles" to last year's dreary "Old, Old West." The genre is always ripe for more fun, and with the acrobatically brilliant Jackie Chan in fine fettle, what can go wrong? What goes wrong with "Shanghai Noon" is quite simple: not enough Chan in action, the interstices between which tend to lag, to drag, to descend into the mundane, only, granted, again to soar once he is in the air doing the things that look so much as if they have to be computer-augmented but aren't. Chan is the genuine article and at his finest he is incomparable.

The story here is of a lowly Imperial guard (Chan), who accompanies three more senior guards to the Old West in 1881 bearing a ransom in gold for Princess Pei Pei (Lucy Liu, known best for her work in "Ally McBeal"), and who gets lost and winds up not with the gold but, after some early sparring and distrust, teamed with a would-be train robber named Roy O'Bannon (Owen Wilson, who does some neat tricks of his own, or seems to). O'Bannon isn't the fellow's real name, we learn, in one of the better throw-away lines, a companion to some playfulness with our hero's name, Chon Wang, which, if you pronounce it fast bears an unmistakable identity to that American actor best known for his Westerns, and which name, by the way, is derided as ridiculous for a cowboy hero.

The villain, Lo Fong (Roger Yuan), arranged to spirit the princess away from the Forbidden City and has her now in a condition of near servitude working along with other terrified Chinese immigrants. Our boy, on the way to his rescue missions along with O'Bannon, has been abducted, gently, by Indians, and married off to a gorgeous bride (Brandon Merrill) who, as things go on, becomes both his salvation and also, considerately, moves on to different pastures when Chon Wang finds himself a more suitable lady friend.

The fun in all this centers on the martial arts wizardry that rescues Chon Wang from fates worse than and including death, and some playful and serendipitous gunplay by O'Bannon, not known hitherto for his facility with a pistol. There is also a fabulous scene in a brothel, where our two heroes, in adjacent bathtubs, drink themselves into delirious hilarity, and we've also an obligingly obedient horse, a gaggle of accommodating and fully understanding ladies of the evening, a few ethnic jokes - our Chinese good guy is mistakenly thought at one point to be Jewish, Orthodox at that - plus riffs on the usual robber-marshal stand-offs. The latter is named Van Cleef (Xander Berkeley), a name that will ring a bell with genre enthusiasts. And speaking of names, owing to Chon Wang's native costume early on, he earns from the Indians the name "Fights-in-a-Dress." Whatever he's dressed in, Jackie Chan should be onscreen doing more of his remarkable tricks, which I hope will make the inevitable sequel more focused and raucous than this.

Written by Alfred Gough and Miles Millar; directed by Tom Dey. Rated PG-13

Bangkok - A great bargain

By George Hobica
COX NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. I will be traveling to Bangkok in the fall and am looking for some hotel recommendations. I'd like something moderately priced, close to public transportation and in a safe area.

A. Bangkok continues to be one of the world's great bargain destinations—another good reason for visiting, besides wonderful food and culture and the world's friendliest people.

The Shangri-La Hotel Bangkok offers a special rate of $190 per night including full breakfast, free round-trip airport Mercedes sedan transfers, free laundry and dry cleaning, free local phone calls, taxes at cost and free 6 p.m. late checkout. It's also the only Bangkok hotel that is both on the river and also just steps from the city's recently opened Sky Train.

Bangkok is a very safe city so you needn't worry about that issue no matter where you stay.

For more information about this Value Rate Package call your travel agent or visit www.shangri-la.com.

Q. You recently mentioned a hotel in New York that has high-speed Internet access. Is there a directory or Web site that lists hotels offering such access in other cities?

A. Two helpful Web sites include www.wayport.com and www.stsn.com where you can find hotels with high-speed Internet connections in the United States, listed by state. Wayport's site also allows you to find high-speed access listed by hotel chain rather than by individual hotel in case you prefer one chain over another.

Q. We read your comments in a recent column about using a wheelchair while flying. Since I am a wheelchair user and like keeping it with me when I travel, I'm wondering what FAA rule or federal law states that the airlines must let you take your wheelchair on board in the cabin. I would like to make a copy and show it to the flight attendants in case I have problems. Rather than cite a newspaper article, it would be better if I could show them the law in black and white.

A. The Air Carrier Access Act covers access to air transportation not just for wheelchair users but for all disabled travelers.

For more information about what it covers, you can write to the U.S. Department of Transportation, Aviation Consumer Protection Division, C-75,400 Seventh St., SW, Washington, DC 20590. Or visit them online at www.dot.gov/aircon-sumer/disabled.htm.

For the reader who asked about access to oxygen on board commercial aircraft, this is also a good source.

Q. I'd like to comment about your response to the reader who asked about obtaining foreign currency before leaving the United States. Rather than pay inflated prices for such currency, the simpler solution is to wait and purchase foreign currency on arrival at the airport ATM machine using your bank card. Make sure you have an adequate balance before you travel, and check in advance with your bank to learn the maximum you can withdraw per day. In the event that the ATM rejects your card at the airport, take a small amount of travelers' checks as a backup.

When you are in the city and have the option of several banks, if one rejects your card, try another. This happened to me in London and again in Italy. All I had to do is walk a few blocks and try another bank until I found one that accepted my card.

If you get travelers' checks from your auto club such as AAA, there is no fee and you simply redeposit the unused in your bank on return. Cheap insurance, indeed.

A. I always use ATMs when I travel abroad and I haven't carried travelers' checks for years, since ATMs give you the best exchange rate. However, there are some caveats: besides having a card rejected, there's always the possibility of an ATM malfunction, resulting in the machine retaining your card (a disaster if this happens over a weekend or bank holiday), or your card could be lost or stolen.

Also, many banks charge a fee to cash each travelers' check. It's a good idea to carry a second ATM card (from another account or the same account if your bank permits this) and not rely solely on one source of currency.

Also, some U.S. banks charge as much as $5 for each foreign ATM transaction, so shop around for one that doesn't charge a fee (they do exist).

Small pets allowed in airline cabins

By George Hobica
COX NEWS SERVICE

Q. Can you tell me if any of the airlines allow you to carry a cat on board on international flights — specifically from the United States to Spain? Is there a quarantine period for bringing a cat into Spain? I have heard horror stories about animals traveling in the luggage hold, and would never subject mine to that experience.

A. There is no quarantine period for bringing a pet to Spain, but the animal must have a certificate stating that it is in good health and has been inoculated against rabies. The document must be issued by a veterinarian and certified by the Spanish Consulate.

Some airlines, including Delta, Iberia and Spanair allow a small pet in the cabin, but it must fit certain restrictions. For instance, the pet and its kennel must weigh 13 pounds or less (Iberia and Spanair), or the kennel's dimensions can't be larger than 21 by 13 by 9 inches, and be able to fit under the seat in front of you (Delta).

The charge to bring your pet in the cabin ranges from $75 (Spanair) to $125 (Iberia) each way, and you must inform the airline ahead of time. In some cases, you have to reserve a space, since only a small number of pets are allowed in each cabin.

Also, for anyone contemplating shipping a pet as cargo: it's generally not a good idea, and this summer, except for Continental, almost every major U.S. airline has a pet embargo because of the hazards of warm-weather travel.

Q. I am contemplating a cruise to Antarctica. However, I am curious about how to check the safety records of the various cruise companies that are registered outside the United States. Can you tell me where I can find such information?

A. There's no central, easily accessed database for cruise ship safety, according to Fran Golden, author of "The Complete Idiot's Guide to Cruising," although the U.S. Coast Guard does maintain reports of some maritime accidents at www.uscg.mil; however, you needn't worry since modern ships have radar (unlike the Titanic) to warn them of looming icebergs, and according to a spokesperson for the International Council of Cruise Lines (www.iccl.org), there's never been a safety incident aboard an Antarctic cruise.

Q. How much does it cost to rent a houseboat on Lake Powell in Arizona?

A. This is a very relaxing and scenic way to spend a vacation, especially for a family or group of friends. Rates range from $630 for three days in the off season in the smallest size houseboat to $5,400 in peak season for seven days in the largest boat available (a 59-footer).

For more information, visit www.visitlakepowell.com and click on "On the Water," or call (800) 528-6154.

Q. I am planning a trip this summer and would like to know about using the Internet in Europe. My daughter loves AOL Instant Messenger. Can she use it from a hotel room using her existing account or will extra adapters or something else be required? Will it be expensive to use?

We will be staying in various places, including the SAS in Brussels, the SAS Royal Viking in Stockholm, and the Hilton West Pier, Brighton, England.

A. Here are some tips for your daughter and anyone else planning to get online while traveling abroad: AOL maintains local phone access numbers all around the world, allowing you to get online for the price of a local call. Get the numbers before you leave home, not when you arrive, at AOL Keyword "Access." AOL maintains a help desk specializing in overseas connections: (703) 264-1184 or (800) 269-8643.

If it's vital that you get online while abroad, test the local access number from home before you leave (in other words, make an international call). If there's a problem, you can troubleshoot it with AOL more easily and less expensively than by calling the United States from your European hotel).

AOL charges from $6 to $12 per hour for foreign access, so it can get expensive.

Learn how to activate the "ignore dial tone" command on your modem so it will bypass a strange-sounding foreign dial tone.

Bring an extra phone cord — you'll often need one to hook up in your hotel room.

Call or fax the hotel before you leave home and ask: are the room phones modern modular ones or are they old-fashioned hard-wired ones? Do guests have problems using their laptops from the rooms? Is the phone system analog or digital? Who can I contact if I have problems getting connected? Is the business center Internet-ready and is it accessible 24/7?

If the phone system is digital, you'll need a digital-compatible modem or you may damage your equipment.

If the system isn't U.S.-compatible (RJ-11 in phone industry speak), bring phone adapters for the countries you'll be visiting. They're available from a company called TeleAdapt (1-877-835-3232, www.teleadaptusa.com) or Laptop Travel (1-888-527-8728, www.laptoptravel.com).

If you're having problems connecting, don't call the front desk. Ask to speak to whomever maintains the hotel's computer systems.

Cancer survivors do a lap at the Relay For Life held Friday and Saturday at Alumni Field. Hundreds turned out to make the annual Cohasset event a success.

Cohasset's on the right track in cancer battle

Relay For Life raises upwards of $90,000

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Last year, Bob Clifford's team in the Relay For Life was called Anthony's Team, for his nephew who had been diagnosed with synovial-cell sarcoma. Anthony, 16, walked in last year's relay and was there again this year, with his cancer in remission, walking as part of Holly's Team.

"I always name my team for someone who is fighting cancer," said Clifford, 55, and a cancer survivor himself. The Hingham resident was diagnosed with prostate cancer in November of 1996, at the age of 51. He walked in the relay the following June and has put a team together every year since. This year the team walked for Holly chase of Weymouth, who, at 23 years old, is battling advanced Hodgkin's disease.

"I had to do something," said Clifford about his yearly efforts.

"There's a sense of helplessness when you are diagnosed. There's a feeling that you've lost control of your life," he said. "This is a way you can get your life back."

Clifford, his nephew Anthony Spacco of Abington, and more than 600 other people took part in the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life at Cohasset High School last weekend. The Cohasset event was one of 93 similar events taking place across New England this spring, including walks the same evening in Hanover and Abington.

The walk started in 1985, when Dr. Gordon Klatt of Tacoma, Wash., an American Cancer Society volunteer, ran and walked a local track for 24 hours. Since its inception, the Relay For Life has become the American Cancer Society's signature event, raising millions of dollars for the organization. Participants in the relay put together teams, raise pledges and keep one member of the team walking around a track for the duration of the event.

The Cohasset walk kicked off at 3 p.m. when the starter's pistol fired from the bleachers bordering the school's football field and

MBTA pulls mitigation offers

By Rick Collins

The tide in the ongoing battle over the Greenbush commuter rail line once again shifted last Friday when the MBTA liaison to towns Kevin Dasey informed Cohasset the MBTA was pulling all mitigation offers off the table.

"This is very frustrating," said Thomas Gruber, mitigation committee chairman . "I've been in the mitigation group for about three years and every once and a while, the T seems to arbitrarily take things away from us."

In May, the MBTA presented to the town's mitigation committee a list of six items that the agency would be willing to give the town, including a new well off Sohier Street, a visual buffer between the Town's lobster trade hangs on

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Issues regarding lobster pounds and sewer outfall pipes have thrust the town's lobster fleet back into the limelight. Lobstermen have been a staple of Cohasset Harbor since long before the creation of the internal combustion engine, and with any luck, they will continue to be seen long into the future.

But recent problems with a reduction in the yearly catch, a stagnation of fleet size and other factors have made making a livelihood at sea difficult.

Recent problems with a reduction in the yearly catch, a stagnation of fleet size and other factors have made making a livelihood at sea difficult.

In 1995, Cohasset ranked 10th in the state in catch with lobstermen landing 570,000 pounds of the critters. In 1998, according to Bill Adler, director of the Massachusetts Lobstermen's Association in Scituate, Cohasset ranked15th in the state, catching just 350,000 pounds of lobsters. He also said the fleet size has dropped from 11th out of the 40 ports in Massachusetts, to 13th, with just 35 state-registered boats.

According to Harbor Committee chairman John Bertolami, the Cohasset fleet used to rank as high as second in the state.

"Since the early '90s, there's been a major change in the industry," said 24-year lobsterman Scott Herzog. He said he got into the business when he was young and "it seemed

The Oaks branches out

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Roys' Georgian-style mansion known as The Oaks at 49 Margin St. is going to get a little larger.

This week the zoning board of appeals approved a special permit for construction of a three-story addition with a tuck-under, three-car garage at the house, which dates back to the 1920s. A special permit was needed because the addition will exceed height limitations allowed under the town zoning bylaw.

The zoning board said the addition would extend the existing roofline, which will maintain a visual symmetry and would balance the architectural features of the house.

The town zoning bylaws set height restrictions at 35 feet. The Roys' roofline is 39 feet.

Peter Roy's and Leah Taylor-Roy's architect said the materials and design would be such that the addition, which would house informal family space, would blend into the existing structure.

"We're not seeking to increase the height, we're only seeking to build an addition onto one end of the structure," architect Guy Grassi said at the May hearing. "The only sensitive, thoughtful way to do that is to match the existing architecture." He explained that the addition would have to be lowered by four feet to make it comply with the zoning bylaw.

In its decision the zoning board said the proposed addition does not affect the abutters' view of the harbor, particularly in light of the large trees on the Roys' property between the proposed addition and the westerly side of Margin Street.

The zoning board determined that dropping the roofline on the addition by four feet to make it comply with the by-law would detract from the symmetry of the structure.

The Oaks estate is assessed at $3-1/2 million, according to the assessors' office.

'Class of 2000 rock on!'

CHS graduates 59 students

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Though a country star shined at the South Shore Music Circus on Saturday night — the combined star power from the group that gathered under the tent on Sunday proved much greater. Hours after Trisha Yearwood performed on the round stage, the Cohasset High School Class of 2000 took over, and celebrated 13 years of closeness.

The musical theme was continued in class valedictorian Stefan Vanderweil's speech, which started out with him wishing that he had forgotten his homework or played hooky more often so he wouldn't have to give a speech. He compared his class to a bass guitar, saying the members of the class, like each bass guitar, has its own distinctive sound, but when joined together, also sounded great.

"And though we sound great together, we also sound great on our own," he said, adding that though they've played together for years, they're now going to be going off and making new music with other instruments. He finished by saying, "We won't be able to forget our years of jamming together. Class of 2000 rock on!"

The ceremony began with the members of the class entering the tent from different entrances to the strains of Pomp & Circumstance, played by the school's concert band, and crossing over the stage before taking their seats. Principal Curt Collins, who is retiring after five years at the school's helm, formally welcomed the crowd to the ceremony. The senior members of the high school chorus sang the national anthem, accompanied by trombonist Elizabeth Hassan.

"We won't be able to forget our years of jamming together."
— class valedictorian Stefan Vanderweil

Class president Jen Chastain was then welcomed to the stage by an ovation as big as any Yearwood had received the night before. In her remarks, Chastain said that she had initially wanted to avoid explaining why her class was the best one, as all the class presidents preceding her had done. But she said "there was no way I could avoid doing exactly what every other class had done." She then presented the crowd with the top 10 reasons why she believes the Class of 2000 is the best class, Safety Officer Rick Yocum will ask Norfolk County Engineers to do a traffic survey in the vicinity of JJ's Dairy Hut on Rte. 3A in response to safety issues raised by a resident. Yocum said he forwarded the resident's letter on to the Mass. Highway Department which has jurisdiction.

"I am asking our county engineers to do a traffic survey so that the traffic committee can make recommendations to Mass. Highway concerning safety issues," Yocum stated in a memo to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Memorial tree

Glenn A. Pratt of King Street wrote to the school facilities committee to make it aware of a memorial tree near the library doors at the school.

"The Class of 1963 planted and dedicated (the tree) on the occasion of their 25th reunion to remember their classmate Dennis J. Reardon, who was killed in Vietnam," Pratt stated.

"I would be happy to work with your committee, architect and the Class of 1963 to assure that tree is protected or re-located during renovation at the school," he said.

Pratt suggested that a memorial park or garden might be considered at the high school which has nine memorials to persons around the property at the school. The high school will soon undergo a major renovation project.

Museum opens for summer season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum on Elm Street at Cohasset Center opened for its summer season Thursday, June 1. Its open season runs through September and open hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. There is no admission charge and donations are welcomed.

The Maritime Museum, located in the unique 18th-century Ship Chandlery originally of Samuel Bates, houses collections relating to Cohasset's maritime history, mainly from the "Age of Sail" during the 19th century. Included in its exhibits are artifacts from the town's 19th-century fishing fleets, sections devoted to shipwrecks, lifesaving and navigation, also an exhibit showing the history of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouses.

Featured in museum exhibits are a number of ship models showing sailing vessels of the 19th century. The collection of models includes two of Donald McKay's East Boston-built clipper ships and a hull model of an early Cohasset fishing schooner of a type known as a "pinky," dating from the early 1800s.

The museum's second floor holds exhibits of general historical interest, ranging from Native American stone tools to an early cordwainer's desk and tools, housewright's tools, desk and chair from one of Cohasset's first schoolhouses, a display of old maps of the town and numerous other artifacts from Cohasset's early days. The old Chandlery building itself, of post and beam construction, is the only example remaining of the buildings dating from Cohasset's early years as a maritime community, and is largely unaltered.

The Cohasset Historical Society's telephone is (781) 383-1434.

Chemical byproduct triggers changes at the water plant

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission is nothing if not proactive when it comes to providing safe drinking water.

The commission was not required to test the town's water supply for Total Trihalomethane (TTHM) two weeks ago, but it did so as a precaution. When tests showed a level of TTHM much higher than the acceptable maximum limit, the water commission didn't have to take further action right away. The commission did so anyway, informing town officials and the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) within days of the test.

After meeting with DEP last week to discuss ways to lower the TTHM level, the water commission did not have to implement any of its suggestions. But the water commission is in the process of implementing all DEP's ideas for lowering TTHM levels.

"We're being very proactive here," said water commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. "We were not required to do the tests in the first place, but we felt it was the right thing to do. DEP is not requiring us to do anything at this time, but they are glad we called them and they are working closely with us."

McNabb said the water commission will meet with the selectmen at their open meeting on Tuesday, June 21 to discuss the TTHM situation.

TTHM is a known carcinogen, and a byproduct of water chlorination. Chlorine mixes with organic matter lived tree leaves and other materials, with TTHM as one of the byproducts. Public drinking water must be treated with chlorine to remove potentially deadly organic material that can contaminate water with e-coli or other substances deadly to humans.

State officials have assured town leaders that Cohasset has nothing to fear from the presence of TTHM in the local water supply. Officials from DEP point out that the town conducted only one test for TTHM, but the correct methodology requires four tests over a one-year period. Current federal regulations permit a maximum level of 100 parts per billion of TTHM in public water supplies. The lone Cohasset test revealed TTHM at 159 parts per billion. In contrast, a test conducted last year on chlorine-treated water leaving the water plant registered a TTHM level of nine parts per billion, McNabb said. The Environmental Protection Agency plans to require TTHM levels of 40 parts per billion or lower by 2007.

DEP offered several suggestions for Cohasset to lower its TTHM levels. First, the town should conduct more tests. McNabb said the water commission has already conducted several new tests and is awaiting the results.

Another suggestion from DEP was to reduce the amount of water held overnight in the plant's "clear well." The clear well is a four-foot-deep well that sits under the entire water plant. Each day, the clear well is filled several times with 130,000 gallons of chlorinated water. When the clear well is filled, the water is pumped out to the town's distribution system. Customers use what they need, and the remaining water travels to the Bear Hill storage tank. Because of a glitch in the water plant0s operating method, water cannot be pumped into the system until the clear well is filled. The Cohasset plant does not run continuously, so workers shut it down each night when they leave for the evening. Each night, before the plant is shut down, the clear well is filled so 130,000 gallons of water can be sent into the system in the morning when the plant reopens. The water being held in the clear well overnight could be developing excess TTHM as it sits in the plant.

"We've reduced the amount of water sitting in the clear well from four-feet deep to two-feet deep," McNabb said. "We're also in the middle of a study of ways to convert the plant to a continuous operation, rather than shutting it down at night."

DEP has also suggested that the water commission examine different ways of pre-treating raw water with chlorine. McNabb said the water commission's consultant will examine several different methods of pre-treatment to reduce TTHM.

One final suggestion from DEP was to test the water at Lily Pond for TTHM. McNabb said TTHM can occur in nature. The water commission is preparing to perform several tests on Lily Pond.

McNabb said the water commission is not trying to alarm residents about Cohasset's drinking water, which is safe by state and federal standards. But people have a right to be well-informed, McNabb said.

"People have a right to know what0s in their drinking water," McNabb said. "In a year, we'll have done four tests and we'll have an official TTHM reading. But we don't want to wait that long to do something. The water commission is committed to continuing its proactive approach. We are going to go beyond the federal standards if we can. We are going to do all we can to lower our TTHM level below 40 [parts per billion] before 2007."

Cohasset prevails in town landfill case

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The conservation commission scored a victory over the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill in a recent court decision concerning the town landfill. Superior Court Judge Ralph D. Gants ruled that the conservation commission couldn't be forced to declare that the town landfill violates the Wetlands Protection Act. CHL filed a legal complaint against the conservation commission in Norfolk Superior Court in 1997 for allegedly failing to take timely action on the complaint. CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said no appeal is planned at this time.

"The time is not ripe for appeal because there are still components of the case ongoing," Moehrke said.

The court case was rooted in a complaint by CHL that the town had illegally altered wetlands at the town landfill in 1997. At that time, CHL sought a Request For Determination (RFD) from the conservation commission to determine whether the town had violated the Wetlands Protection Act by altering the wetlands. When someone requests an RFD, the conservation commission has 21 days to respond if the application is complete and all supporting materials have been filed. Attorneys for CHL initiated the court action after the conservation commission did not act on the wetland complaint within 21 days, allegedly violating state law.

In his decision, Judge Gants said that landowners and their agents usually file an RFD to determine whether they can perform specific types of work or construction on their property that may affect wetlands. In this case, CHL, which does not own the town landfill, sought the RFD without submitting all the supporting materials required by the conservation commission to begin its review. Specifically, CHL had not supplied maps of the town landfill showing the full extent of the property and the wetland alterations that had been performed. In some cases, the conservation commission may choose to waive the supporting materials requirement. On March 6, 1997, the conservation commission stated in writing that it would not waive the supporting materials requirement for CHL's case.

"This ruling disposes of CHL's challenge of the conservation commission's inaction on the CHL's Request For Determination of Applicability concerning the town's Cedar Street landfill," said Daniel R. Deutsch, from town counsel's office. "The court agreed with us that the RFD was not complete and that the commission therefore was not required to act on it."

The Superior Court decision may be moot anyway because the Department of Environmental Protection has already ruled that the town did alter wetlands near the landfill in violation of state environmental laws.

Still pending in the case is a motion by CHL for the court to determine that the town altered the wetlands without an order of conditions from the conservation commission, as required by state law. The town has filed its own motion to dismiss CHL's claim. Gants denied without prejudice both motions for the time being. In his decision, Gants said that he will not get involved in this aspect of the case while DEP decides what to do about the town's violation of the Wetlands Protection Act. Gants said it is possible that the court will take further action on the case in the future.

"There appears to be no dispute that these wetlands were indeed altered by the town and that they must, per the DEP, be restored to pre-existing conditions," Gants wrote in his decision. "There appears, however, to be substantial uncertainty as to what it means in concrete terms for those wetlands to be restored to pre-existing conditions. It is not at all clear that a declaration that these defendants must restore these wetlands to pre-existing conditions is very useful."

Cohasset Golf Club scores with zoning board

Abutters' appeal is denied

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Golf Club does not need zoning relief to operate its dining room and lounge facilities for special functions.

That was the decision the zoning board reached this week in responding to an appeal launched by abutters to the building inspector's ruling that the golf club did not need a special permit for those accessory uses. Abutters also had concerns about expansion of the parking lot.

The Cohasset zoning bylaw allows golf courses as a matter of right in residential districts. But what was at issue was whether that right included special functions.

At the April hearing, Laurel Martinez of 136 Lamberts Lane, spokesman for the neighbors, said the golf club should have to face some sort of regulation. Martinez said social memberships and the use of the golf memberships by family members have significantly increased the number of people driving on Lamberts Lane to get to and from the golf club.

She said that the catering of social functions at the clubhouse were so remote from the golf course as not to allowed without a special permit. Martinez said the enlargement of the clubhouse currently in process could exacerbate traffic on Lamberts Lane.

Of the club's 883 members, 265 are "social" as opposed to "regular" golf-playing members.

Cliff Mitman, club president, explained that the social members were mostly people waiting for one of the limited number of regular memberships that would allow them to play golf at any time. Social members can play twice a month with a regular member.

The club's attorney, Richard Henderson, argued that the club and clubhouse were established prior to enactment of the zoning bylaw in 1955 and therefore, were protected as pre-existing non-conforming uses.

In its June 12 decision, the zoning board found that the accessory activities at the club do not violate the zoning bylaw but was careful to point out that the ruling did not give the club "free reign to do anything it wants," said Ben Lacy, who wrote the decision.

"The club would, however, always be free to seek a special permit to add or expand any given accessory activity," he wrote.

The zoning board said that there was insufficient evidence presented on the parking lot violations for it to reach a decision.

The board therefore denied the abutters' appeal in its entirety.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

Allison Berg to sail off to Annapolis

NDA grad will swim for Navy

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

With a 1380 on your SATs, membership in the National Honor Society and a 4.05 grade-point average and numerous academic awards at a well-respected private school — your college options are wide open. But if you have also placed second in the 2.5 mile open swim in the 1999 Ironguard Competition, been a two-time YMCA national qualifier, been a YMCA District Champion, and are the holder of seven school swimming records, a future involving water might start to look like a good idea.

That's why Allison Berg is going to the US Naval Academy.

At her graduation ceremony from Notre Dame Academy, Allison smiled on stage as she formally received her appointment to Annapolis from the area's coordinator for admission to the Naval Academy.

She was still smiling later in the week in her interview for the Mariner. "I'm excited. I want to leave," she said. Allison will leave soon enough. Induction Day is June 30 and for the rest of the summer, while her friends are spending one last summer on the beach, Allison will be going through the Navy's version of boot camp.

But she has had more than six months to prepare. She had already been accepted academically, physically and medically to the Naval Academy in the fall, and all that stood before her and Annapolis was a Congressional nomination. That came in early December, right before her 17th birthday, when Representative William Delahunt, D-Quincy, wrote to inform her that he would be nominating her for the appointment.

This was much to the dismay of her grandfather. Allison's maternal grandfather is a graduate of West Point and spent 20-years in the Army, reaching the rank of lieutenant colonel.

"Some friends are proud, excited, some are unclear about what it's all about. Some said 'I can't believe you're going to do that'."
— Allison Berg

"He lobbied quite a bit for West Point," said Allison's mother Miki Berg. "Finally after about 30 e-mails, we finally told him she had made her decision."

Actually according to her mother, Allison had every intention of going to Annapolis since last summer, when she participated in the U.S. Naval Academy Summer Seminar.

"When we went to pick her up from the airport, she got off the plane and said to us, 'I'm going to that school,'" Berg said.

Allison said she liked "everything" about the experience, from the academics and athletics, to the military aspect of it. She had also been accepted to West Point, but didn't participate in the school's summer session, which, according to Allison, ended up playing a role in her final decision.

Allison Berg is on her way to Annapolis.

Her mother said she was initially surprised when Allison first mentioned the idea of attending a military school. "I just wanted to make sure that she knew enough information ahead of time as possible," she recalled.

Berg doesn't see the rigidity of the school being detrimental to Allison. "She's very structured," she said. "I think being an athlete helped with her focus, and swimming taught her a lot about managing her time."

In fact, one has to wonder if Allison's schedule at the Naval Academy would be a slowdown for the 17-year old. Her day during the school year started with a 5:30 a.m. wake-up followed by an hour of swim practice, a full-day of school and homework, followed by another hour of swimming.

Reaction from her friends and classmates, according to Allison, ranged from supportive to amazement. "Some friends are proud, excited, some are unclear about what it's all about. Some said 'I can't believe you're going to do that'," Allison said.

Count Sister Barbara Barry, principal of Notre Dame Academy as one of those who initially questioned Allison's decision. "She said to me, 'I don't picture you going to the Naval Academy' and that just made me want to do it more."

Allison said that some of her friends have questioned her as to why she would willingly want to go to a military college, where the demands upon students academically and physically are much more than at a traditional four-year school. "They said, 'We're going to be partying and you're going to be doing work, you'll never have any fun.' I like putting in the work. I wouldn't like going to a school and partying all the time."

But even the most diligent of workers find the military academies initiations, or "hell weeks," too much to handle. But Allison thinks she's ready. "I know a little bit about it from the summer," she said. "It has its purpose. They break you down so they can teach you how they want ... I know not take it personally, everyone goes through it."

She also thinks she is physically ready. She passed the physical tests needed for admission while visiting Annapolis last summer, and has been working with a personal trainer for the past six weeks, doing running, calisthenics and weight-training, as well as her usual swimming routine as she will be a member of the Navy Division I swim team.

She's also not worried about being a female in the predominantly male academy. She was concerned at first about how she would be treated, but said she had spoken to some female cadets during her visit last summer and had her fears eased. "They said they're all like brothers," Allison said.

Though she must serve in the Navy for five years after graduating from Annapolis, Allison, who said she is interested in majoring in science or medicine, is unwilling to say what she will do after that. She hasn't ruled out a career in the military, but said she wants to see how her first tour of duty goes.

With time winding down until her daughter ships out, Berg said that she will miss her but knows it's time for Allison to move on. "I've had a year to prepare myself," she said adding that she and her husband, Peter, have supported Allison the entire way. "I'm very proud of her, but I know it's time for her to be her own person."

But count the Bergs to be in attendance in December when Allison helps the Navy swim team take on its rival from the north, Army, down in Annapolis.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Mitigation matters

If the MBTA needed anything it's a political consultant with some savvy who knows how to deal with the media and public opinion.

What it does have is a near Superman in the form of Kevin Dasey who, as the T's liaison with the Greenbush towns has — up to this point — been able to literally "move mountains."

But what the state agency doesn't have is any common sense. All the good work that Mr. Dasey has accomplished, particularly with Cohasset, will be all for naught if the T sticks with its plan to promise nothing in exchange for inserting diesel train service through town.

With his combination of straight talk coupled with a sympathetic ear that earned their trust, Mr. Dasey brought town officials to the mitigation table. Just last week Cohasset mitigation committee members, selectmen and Mr. Dasey sat in an open meeting at town hall where Cohasset officials presented an additional list of about 26 mitigation measures to lessen the impact of the train. Mr. Dasey said "yes, no or maybe" to each as they went down the list.

It was all part of bargaining in good faith with an agency that didn't have a human face until a year or so ago, when someone got smart and hired someone who could relate. Mr. Dasey, who lives in Braintree, is a former member of the Citizens Advisory Committee, appointed by the Secretary of Environmental Affairs to comment on the Greenbush environmental feasibility study. As a citizen appointee in that roll, he sat on the other side of the table.

No one really expected that the T would agree to all that Cohasset wants. But the town thought it could expect some reasonable measures and protection.

What we do know is this: the MBTA's Greenbush project is expected to cost about $408 million. With the new financial accountability the T will have to adhere to as of July 1, the agency says it can't afford any extras. But after more than a decade of squabbling over Greenbush, you'd think that just as the clouds were lifting, the T would realize that a few extra million here or there doesn't add up to a heck of a lot when all factors are figured in.

Greenbush towns are not the same as those along the Middleboro and Plymouth lines, if they were then we would have seen train service here three years ago. The towns along Greenbush want the best, most mitigated train possible. The citizens here are simply not going to settle for anything less. After its experience with Hingham, the T should wise up. Time — and delays — translate into higher and higher costs. This is no time to play hardball. Get back to the table — even if it means loosening the purse strings a bit — and let's get this Greenbush line built the way it should be.

You can help save a tree

Fifty-seven million trees were cut for catalogs last year. Catalogs represent 3 percent of all the trash landfilled in our nation. Have I got your attention? A quick and very simple way to curtail duplicate or unwanted catalogs is to get a big manila envelope and address it to: Direct Marketing Association Mail Preference Service, P.O. Box 9008, Farmingdale, NY 11735.

Keep the envelope near where you sort mail. Tear off the mailing label portion from each unwanted catalog. When the envelope is full, write a note that you would like your name removed from all the lists in the envelope. Households that succeed in stopping unwanted catalogs, are truly "saving a tree." Thanks to Claire Sullivan, Planner for South Shore Recycling Cooperative, for this useful information.

Sewer grants

TO THE EDITOR:

As the sewering projects in Cohasset near completion I would like to thank Sen. Bob Hedlund for his well-timed help in obtaining important state funding for the town.

Although the state dictated the general scope of the North Cohasset project, when the bids came in $2.1 million over the estimate, the state did not have funds to cover the excess. Hedlund worked effectively to obtain the missing funding, and we were notified recently that it would be made available to us. As one of the sewer commissioners who at town meeting advocated this project based upon the availability of state grants, I felt very let down when a portion of the grants fell away. But "all is well that ends well," and I thank the senator for his important and timely support.

Technology aide

TO THE EDITOR:

The letter to the editor in the Mariner June 8, calling for the reinstatement of the technology aide at the Osgood School, was a balanced and fair representation of the facts surrounding this budget cut and I applaud those leading the charge. I would like, however, to add some thoughts regarding this situation and hopefully bring some closure to this issue.

Budget cuts are always very difficult. Reaching a consensus on what items should comprise those cuts is almost impossible. Just as there are advocates asking for the technology position to be reinstated, so are there citizens who feel that the most effective approach, given the budget constraints, would be to continue to use the remaining elementary technology teacher on a full time basis at Deer Hill. Still others question the need for technology in any form during the "learn to read" years.

It is very important for all concerned citizens to participate in the budget process as it unfolds. The concerned parents could have been far more effective and perhaps might have influenced the administrators who proposed this cut, when the discussion took place in February. Raising the issue now offers the opportunity for theoretical debate but it is too late for any practical solution.

The Osgood Technology Lab will not be underutilized during the 2000-2001 school year. Ted Malvey and Ken Cisneros will work with the Osgood and Deer Hill Administrations with the ultimate goal of augmenting the more limited instruction with the integration of technology in the classroom. Technology is, after all, a tool and not an academic subject. Volunteer help would also be a tenable solution if properly organized and monitored.

The school committee cannot commit any money that might become available to reinstate this position or any other line item that has been cut or eliminated during the last three years. The committee must continue to monitor all spending very carefully, particularly SPED costs. The town has gone to great lengths to support cost overruns in the SPED area of the operating budget and it would be fiscally irresponsible to commit money we "might" have without first making sure we can meet the financial obligations of the 2000-2001 operating budget.

We will continue to support any and all fundraising efforts to target specific issues such as the Osgood technology instructor. Last year the Cohasset Basketball Boosters helped to soften the cutbacks in that particular sport. I remarked at that time that unfortunately academic courses do not have booster clubs. We do have our collective concern for our children's education. We may not always reach a consensus on a particular issue, as evidenced here, but hopefully we will always have tolerance for others whose perspective and experience may be different from our own.

Village concerns

TO THE EDITOR:

Last fall, the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) denied a grant for the Harbor Linkage/Elm Street project, a project ill-thought-out, but one we as residents knew would come up again. And indeed, we were proven correct. We now have the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private non-profit group formed 'purely to help the town along with its goal of a redesigned village.' Please. Two of the backers of this private non-profit group are Peter Roy (Atlantica and the Salt House) and Gerde Ordelheide, (The Red Lion Inn). Is this group really set up to 'help the town'? Or is this group set up to usurp the responsibilities of the Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF)?

But let us not forget those letters some of you along Elm Street (and Summer Street/Sankey Road) received in the middle of March from a Jonathan Flood of Boston, Mass., expressing an interest in purchasing your home. Were the Flood letters yet another concept born of this linkage proposal? We do know that the Revitalization Corporation is linked to the Harbor Linkage/Elm Street project. While it may stretch the imagination somewhat, it is possible the Flood letters have no connection.

But add this to the mix: Mr. Flood is part of TGG Ltd. Partnership of Newton, Mass. and he was named "acquisitions and development manager" by the Green Companies, a developer of residential communities. TGG Ltd. Partnership is just one company under the auspices of the Green Companies having the same address and sharing some of the same officers or principals, that is Tony, Alan, or Dan Green.

And in and of itself, the Flood letter may not be a worrisome letter until one is advised of the Green Companies purposes — that of buying and developing residential communities. Such as Pine Hills in Plymouth..... or Wentworth-by-the-Sea in N.H.; The Belmont in West Harwich; Great Harbors, Falmouth Port; The Gables, Newton and many others finished or in the development stages.

You will have to excuse some of us residents — we cannot remember asking for a linkage between the center of town and the harbor. We can not remember asking for a redesigned (Nantucket-style?) town. We cannot even remember asking for the town to be revitalized. We didn't know it was dead. We do remember asking just whose benefit is paramount here.

LIBRARY CORNER

Summer programs

The ever popular "Puzzle Club" returns this summer Monday nights from July 10-Aug. 14. The program, headed by Marge Murphy, librarian at Deer Hill School, begins promptly at 7 p.m. and runs until 8:45 p.m. This program is free and open to children entering grades three to grades five. Contact Children's Librarian, Suzanne Terry, for more information at 383-1348.

The summer reading program for school age children will be ongoing from June 15 to Aug. 15. The statewide program theme this year is, "Open Books, Open Frontiers." A celebratory party for all participants will take place, Thursday, Aug. 17, at 1 p.m.

Video workshop

Young adults, ages 12-19, are invited to create a short video, no longer than 20 minutes, and submit it for a prize. Entries must be submitted to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library by July 24. An "Oscar" awards night will be held Aug. 25 at the Duxbury Free Library.

A MediaOne workshop conducted by representative, Lisa Reddie, will be held Thursday, June 22, from 4-6 p.m. This will be a question and answer period for all those interested in pursuing this opportunity. Reddie will address questions about editing, copywriting, production, etc. She will also assist those who need suggestions, to get started on this summer project.

Sign up continues for this program by calling Suzanne Terry at 383-1348.

Museum passes

The following museum passes, funded by the Friends of the Library, are available to Cohasset residents: Museum of Fine Arts; Boston Children's Museum; Computer Museum, John F. Kennedy Library and Museum; New England Aquarium (not available during July and August); Museum of Science and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.

Other passes to Plimoth Plantation and the USS Constitution are also available to residents and are a gift of Lucille McLoughlin.

An information sheet about all museums, including hours, addresses and phone numbers, is currently available at the front desk of the library. Plan for summer vacation now and call the library at 383-1348 at least 24 hours ahead to secure a museum pass.

Sparky's puppets

Join the fun as Sparky's Puppets perform "Gotcha!" at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library in Cohasset Tuesday, June 20, at 7 p.m. In each story of this collection of folktales, a clever character solves a problem by using nimble thinking or a crafty trick. Watch how a hardworking gardener outwits a pesky goblin. Meet a wise woman, a clever toymaker and Anansi the Spider, a trickster from West Africa. In between stories, see if you can solve the jester's riddles and the professor's puzzlers!

Sparky's Puppets have performed in schools, libraries and festivals throughout New England for more than 20 years. They dramatize favorite children's stories with colorful hand puppets, lively humor and plenty of audience participation. Tuesday's show was created for the library's summer reading program: "Open Books....Open Frontiers."

Sparky's Puppets will perform "Gotcha!" for the library's summer reading program.

Skirmishing with auditors

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I once knew a fellow named Mark Barron who rented a camel to cover the Italo-Ethiopian War for the Associated Press.

At least, he said he did and I believed him but doubts began to creep in when he told me that he put the camel on his expense account and the AP paid him without as much as a raised eyebrow.

Those of you who have skirmished with company auditors over 25-cent items in expense accounts will know what I mean. It's simply not that easy.

I thought of Mark the other day when I read about a contest that was conducted by something called Freeworks.com of Mountain View, Calif., to determine the funniest expense account ever to get by an auditor.

Mark, rest his soul, has been dead these 30-odd years and he wasn't in the contest but I am sure if he was his entry would have been right up there for an honorable mention at least.

I know that because one of the most notable entrants in the contest was Kathryn Scott of Amarillo, Texas, who claimed a $2,500 expense for rental of an elephant to pull some stuck heavy machinery out of a mud hole.

What is a camel but an elephant that was put together by a committee?

The winner, it turned out, was one Dan Wolff, marketing manager of an Oregon software firm, who, on a trip to New Orleans, bought two voodoo dolls ($70) and two sets of coffin nails ($1) to put a curse on a critic who had been bashing his company.

When old newspaper people get together they don't talk about the big stories they have worked on as much as they tell tales (some of them even true) about great expense accounts that have been slipped past company auditors.

The all-time favorite around Boston pitted John Gillhooly, the old Record-American sports columnist, against the financial minions of his publisher, the Hearst Corporation.

John was juggling his expense account for a trip to Quebec one day when he came up with some $50 that he couldn't account for. He thought and thought until his creative mind came up with this:

"$50 . . . limousine to the Shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre to pray for the continued success of the Hearst newspapers in Boston."

There wasn't an auditor in the company who would have turned down that one.

Nationally, the prize always went to Gene Fowler, a columnist for one of the Denver newspapers, who was faced with a shortage of $100 on a trip to Alaska.

Like John Gillhooly, he thought and thought and finally jotted down:

"$50 . . . death of lead sled dog."

That left him still $50 short, until he arrived at one of those strokes of genius that made Gene Fowler a legend in the business.

"$50 . . . flowers for bereaved bitch."

Lobster Lab

To The Editor:

I would like to respond to two recent condescending letters to the Cohasset Mariner regarding the Lobster Lab or Learning Lab or The Center for Urban Coastal Studies or whatever the proponents are calling it this week. Mr. Campbell and Mr. Ulmer should confer with one another before writing their next diatribes.

Mr. Campbell says too many of us are so busy looking in the gutter that we can't see the stars. Believe me Mr. Campbell, I see stars every time I go by the derelict building at the end of Parker Avenue.

Mr. Ulmer displayed a good amount of denial if not ignorance in his response to Mr. Stone's letter as well. Isn't your skin a little too thin guys? Unfortunately, this is the type of response one gets when one has the temerity to question anything that goes on at the Lab.

Let's raise our eyes from the gutter and look at the property. Up until this week there were no signs of any progress on fixing the Hagerty house. The interior is being painted and the exterior is being prepped as well. This is at best, a Band-Aid approach. Mr. Ulmer may enjoy the harbor view from his home, but it evidently doesn't bother him when it comes to the harbor view of others. I'm talking about the taxpayers of Cohasset and people on Parker Avenue who get to look at the blight that has been allowed to continue at the Lab.

While we're talking about raising things, let's talk about raising cash. Mr. Ulmer's proposal says that at this point in the lease approximately $310,000 would be raised. Mr. Ulmer recently told the Selectmen he was a "little behind in his efforts" in raising funds. According to one of the people on the lab's board, fund raising to date has raised around $30,000. Grandiose improvements were to be made to the property by this stage. I guess the bright light from the stars that Mr. Campbell and Mr. Ulmer have been staring at have blinded them to the reality of the situation.

Mr. Ulmer suggests that the two Selectmen who voted against relocating the lobster pound should be the object of anger and frustration from the fishermen in town. I guess ad hominem attacks don't work both ways. Both selectmen were opposed to commercial use of the property in general, which was one of the reasons the town purchased the property in the first place. When I first heard of the proposal to move the pound, one of the proponents was a member of the Lab's board of directors. About a week later he withdrew his support saying he didn't think the proposal had merit. Mr. Ulmer said he would attend a special meeting held at the Hagerty site to discuss the plan. He never showed. So much for being supportive.

Before I am accused of being one of the poor, unenlightened people who can only see the bad in things, let me say that I was very supportive of the Lab proposal. I went to selectmen hearings and town meetings to speak for the project. As a member of the Hagerty Committee I supported both the Lab and the rowing group, but the time has come to fish or cut bait.

Mr. Ulmer refers to his state-of-the-art research facility on 3A. Its success is a credit to him and his efforts. However, it is obvious that it consumes so much of his time that the Lab has suffered as a result. Instead of a tour of his facility, I would like to hear a realistic and unembellished accounting of the Lobster Lab's viability.

The selectmen should put the Lobster/Learning Lab on written notice that it has not performed according to its lease proposal. The terms of the lease allow the town to rescind the lease upon 30 days written notice. The selectmen have verbally informed the Lab that progress is expected by September. This is not sufficient.

I am asking the selectmen to place the Lab under written notice defining what progress is to be made. The letter should clearly state that termination will result if these goals are not met. I would encourage them to do this at their next meeting.

I would suggest to both Mr. Campbell and Mr. Ulmer to get their facts straight before putting pen to paper, or you will indeed simply be seen as pompous hypocrites.

From a toxic waste dump to our newest state parkland

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

One benefit of doing a little work on the side for the state senator is that I occasionally get to tag along on legislative business. And tag along I did for Sen. Robert Hedlund's recent meeting with state and federal representatives who are monitoring the environmental remediation of the 125-acre Hingham Annex, a former ammunition depot and Army Reserve Training Center.

My bike rides through Wompatuck State Park inevitably bring me to the Annex on Leavitt Street in the northwest corner of the park. The area, still under the jurisdiction of the Army, is fenced off, guarded round the clock and closed to the public. Inside the fence, unknown to most Hingham residents, state and federal agencies have been working feverishly for years to prepare the Annex for the public's recreational use. For Hedlund, an open space advocate and avid mountain biker, the ongoing clean-up and eventual incorporation of the Annex into Wompatuck State Park has been something of a pet project, a project that has challenged the creativity, cooperation and, at times, patience of Hedlund, Hingham officials and the Departments of the Army, Environmental Protection and Environmental Management.

Most of the hurdles in a nearly eight-year effort to reclaim an unsightly toxic waste dump have been cleared and if Hedlund succeeds in securing funding for one last aspect of the project, the Annex will welcome hikers, bikers and birders by September of 2001.

I accompanied Hedlund to the Annex as much to satisfy my own curiosity as to give you, Journal readers, a sneak peak at what natural treasures await us. Like Wompatuck State Park, the Annex terrain is rocky, swampy and heavily wooded with mature stands of pine, beech, oak and hemlock crisscrossed by roads (ready-made bike paths) built sturdy enough half a century ago to accommodate 30-ton tractor trailer diesel trucks.

No sooner had we passed through the front gate, when a Baltimore Oriole swept down in front of us. Chipmunks scampered across roadways and stone boundary walls. Dogwood, honeysuckle, wild grape and multiflora rose grew in thickets and sprouted from cracks in pavement and from the slabs and walls of the military buildings. I was prepared to write in length about some of these wild things, but the more interesting story, I think, is the story of Hedlund's and Hingham's determination, at a time when open space is scarce and at a premium, to repair the long-term damage done to these 125 acres and to give the Annex new life, to give us another place to get away from it all. In an ironic sense, though the military abused and contaminated this property, their presence saved it for us, saved it from the development boom of the post-war years.

What we know today as Wompatuck State Park was originally the 3,800 acre Annex to the Naval Ammunition Depot, the area now in and around Bare Cove Park. The story of the Navy's arrival here in Hingham begins in 1903 when a board of Naval officers was appointed to recommend a site for a Naval magazine north of Cape Cod to replace the Civil War-era magazine at Chelsea. A 905-acre tract near the mouth of the Weymouth Back River met the Navy's requirements and in 1906, the acquisition of land - 697 acres in Hingham and 208 acres in Weymouth - began. The original mission of the Ammunition Depot and, later the Annex, was to "receive, renovate, maintain, store and issue ammunition, explosives and technical ordnance material and to perform additional tasks as directed by Bureau of Ordnance." Lt. Commander J.L. Latimer (USN) took command of the Depot in June of 1909 and in 1911 the first ammunition was received for temporary storage at Hingham from the USS Missouri.

With the onset of World War I, the facilities for the production of gun ammunition and the storage of mines, torpedoes and pyrotechnics were expanded. For months after the end of the war, the Depot remained a busy place, disposing of munitions from U.S. Navy fleets, though a lack of funding prevented anything more than limited maintenance and minor repairs to the facilities.

All that changed during the late 1930s as war again ravaged the world. The Navy modernized and expanded the depot's facilities with the acquisition of two additional parcels, including 11 acres bordering Fort Hill Street. In 1941, 3,800 acres of undeveloped land within the towns of Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell were condemned and taken for construction of the new Annex.

After the war, both the Hingham Depot and the Annex were put on maintenance status in 1949, only to be reactivated for the Korean conflict. Ordnance activity ceased at both the Depot and the Annex at the end of the Korean War and the properties were declared surplus.

The Depot was officially transferred to Hingham in 1972 and an Ammunition Depot Committee was appointed by the town to develop a Master Plan and prepare the property for public use. The Plan favored passive-use activities, including walking and bicycling paths and youth athletic fields, for the majority of the Depot area. Buildings were turned over to, among others, the South Shore Conservatory of Music, the Boy Scouts and the New England Wildlife Center and acreage along Beal and Fort Hill streets was rezoned for residential development. The land on the Weymouth side of the Back River became Great Esker Park.

In 1967, 3,000 acres of the 3,800-acre Annex became Wompatuck State Park. The remaining acreage of the original 3,800-acre parcel was transferred from the Navy to the Army. In the early 1980s, it was declared surplus, conveyed to the Department of Environmental Management, and added to Wompatuck. After a 1986 assessment reported a high likelihood of soil contamination, a 125-acre parcel, what we refer to today as the Hingham Annex, was withdrawn as surplus and returned to the Army for remediation.

The Annex served as a sub-installation of Fort Devens until 1995 when the Base Realignment and Closure Committee recommended permanent closure. Hingham expressed an immediate interest in the property and explored numerous options for its reuse before settling on an open space plan and recommending that the Commonwealth take jurisdiction and fold the parcel into Wompatuck State Park.

Enter Hedlund who initiated discussions with representatives of the state Department of Environmental Management only to find himself in a Catch-22. Though interested in adding the parcel to Wompatuck, DEM officials were unwilling to accept the property until deteriorating buildings were demolished and areas contaminated with petroleum/oil/lubricants, heavy metals, volatile organic compounds, PCBs and asbestos were cleaned up to meet federal EPA standards. The Department of Defense, however, was unwilling to fund "improvements" on property it had declared surplus.

The stalemate was broken when Hedlund, negotiating with the Department of Environmental Protection, had the contamination declared a public health risk, a ruling that required the Army to remediate the hazard. At the same time, Hedlund asked for the National Guard's assistance in demolishing and removing the buildings. The Guard agreed to take on the project as a training exercise. With the help of Hingham Town Administrator, Charles Cristello, arrangements were made for the non-hazardous rubble to be used to cap the landfill. A private demolition company agreed to do additional demolition work in exchange for salvage materials.

As the tedious reclamation work continues, away from the eyes of the public, only one hurdle remains. Several heavily reinforced buildings, unable to be razed by the National Guard, require the services of an outside contractor, work estimated to cost upward of $300,000. Hedlund is working with the Secretary of Environmental Affairs and the DEM to find that funding.

"I'm very optimistic that this project will be completed within the next year," says Hedlund, who will invite the public along on an inaugural bike tour of the Annex once the project is completed. "Everyone involved in this effort is in agreement that Wompatuck State Park is one of the Commonwealth's real treasures. How often do you, these days, find 125 acres that can be returned to their natural state for the enjoyment of the public? The project really is a testament to state and local cooperation and creativity."

including, its 'Senior Night Live' show, a picture-perfect prom, the undefeated powder-puff football team, having one of the worst attendance records of any class and being the "class of the millennium."

She thanked all the parents who had helped the class over the years by contributing to its bake sale, supported its activities and "those who brought their clean cars down to be washed."

Class salutatorian Brain Tracy quoted from Dr. Seuss, reminding the class to not always live for others but to live for themselves as well. He also said that a person's chances of succeeding in life didn't rest on whether he or she knew the Kreb's Cycle or the Mark Antony speech in "Julius Caesar" but instead depended on how much a person wants to know.

Collins strayed from the program to pay special tribute to Kara Johansen, who has cerebral palsy, and has been part of the class since kindergarten. Though dressed in a white graduation gown, Johansen, "for her own good reasons," according to Collins, decided to defer her graduation. "She taught you all, and she learned from us," Collins told the class. "You don't appreciate what the lady has done unless you have been with her 180 days a year, six or 7 fi hours a day." The crowd honored Kara's efforts with a standing ovation.

Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey told the class that they will always be part of the Cohasset family. He urged the class to remember that though technology will become more and more engrained into their lives, not to forget that love and friendship is unattainable from a computer. He quoted an Irish saying that read, "May all your skies be blue ones, may all your dreams be seen. May all your friends be true ones and all your joys complete. May happiness and laughter fill all your days for you, and for today and forever after, may all your dreams come true."

The 59 seniors proceeded to take their long-awaited walks across the stage, and then with the lead of Chastain, the Class of 2000 moved their tassels and officially became graduates of Cohasset High School.

Train mitigation talks stall train and the Woodside Cemtery and a $100,000 preservation fund for historic properties. The town countered with a 26-item list that it presented to Dasey on June 5. The list was formally presented to the selectmen at their June 6 meeting, and Gruber and town Manager Mark Hadadd were then asked to set up a mitigation meeting schedule and plan strategy.

According to Haddad, he and Gruber were scheduled to meet together last Friday morning. "Dasey came by and said, 'Oh by the way, the T is pulling everything off the table'."

"He made it sound like the MBTA was overwhelmed with stuff," said Gruber. "I don't know if that's true or not. I really don't know the reasons."

Haddad said that although he also doesn't know the real reason why the MBTA backed off, he said he personally feels that Cohasset and Scituate were looking at the Hingham settlement and told the MBTA that they wanted a similar mitigation package. Among the 26 items Cohasset had asked for included quadrant gates throughout the city, a new fire station on the west side of tracks, traffic flow redesign plans through the town and a $2.1 million preservation fund for historic properties.

"They said they wanted to step back and take a look at everything," said Haddad. "They want to deal with things that will only be directly affected by the train."

But Brian Pedro, an MBTA spokesman, said the agency has not left the negotiating table.

"We're more than happy to talk to the town and see how its needs measure up with the project," he said. "We built the other two lines of the Old Colony project and thought we were very fair when it came to mitigation, while at the same time upholding our responsibilities to the rest of the taxpayers.

"This is their money that we're doling out here," he said.

When asked if the MBTA is backing off because of a financial drain due to the Hingham settlement, Pedro said, "Hingham is a different animal because of the lawsuit."

In May, the MBTA and Hingham Board of Selectmen agreed to a mitigation package that includes a $1.35 million preservation trust fund, and calls for a tunnel to be built underneath Hingham Square. The tunnel is expected to cost approximately $40 million.

Pedro wanted to make it clear that the MBTA has not left the bargaining table.

"We have not pulled the plug, we still want an open dialog," he said. "This does not mean that mitigation talks are dead, but there is a much different financial landscape with forward funding."

Under the so-called "forward-funding" —which takes effect July 1 — the MBTA must live within a fixed budget that is paid for through fares, state tax revenues and assessments to cities and towns, rater than essentially handing the state a bill at the end of every fiscal year.

He said the forward-funding plan will not effect whether the Greenbush line gets built because it is programmed into the capital plan, but the MBTA has to be more cautious where it spends the money.

Scituate officials feel the MBTA's decision to pull mitigation measures in neighboring Cohasset does not bode well for their town.

"I think we need to find out why the (mitigation) package in Cohasset has been taken off the table," said Scituate Selectman Susan Phippen. "Have the towns asked for too much, or does this have to do with the forward-funding issue?" Phippen said, but noted that the new MBTA funding structure concerns operating costs not capital projects like Greenbush so it should not be a factor in these decisions.

Phippen, who along with the rest of the Scituate board was due to meet with Dasey in executive session Wednesday, said she was expecting to hear the same thing Cohasset officials heard last week about mitigation.

"It appears the T is waiting to see what they'll have to do under section 106 requirements, as far as mitigation is concerned," Phippen said. MBTA officials hammered out a nearly $50 million package with Hingham officials which includes a tunnel under the town's historic district and Phippen said neighboring communities are looking for some equity.

Hingham is the only community with a mitigation agreement in writing and Phippen fears that with the soaring cost of the Greenbush rail restoration there just aren't enough mitigation dollars to go around.

"I think a lot of mitigation money was spent in Hingham, $45 million worth" she said. "I'm not sure what's left for the rest of us."

Pedro said that Scituate and Cohasset are not being singled out, saying that "you can go back to any town and see that they did not get their entire wish list."

Gruber said that the MBTA will have to give some mitigation to the town, according to what effect the train has on wetlands and any historic properties but said other than that, the MBTA technically does not have to offer anything else and that the negotiations had traditionally been done in "good faith."

"But when they come to the table and offer us certain things and then pull them off, what type of negotiations are that?" asked Gruber.

He said that the Cohasset mitigation committee has no plans to meet in the near future because "there's nothing to discuss."

Mixed-use denied for King Street triangle

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It's back to the drawing board for Joseph Rosano, owner of the King Street triangle.

Rosano went to the zoning board in April in the hope of obtaining variances and a special permit that would allow him to construct a mixed-use, two-story building on the 22,000-square-foot parcel that would house offices and residential apartments.

A local contractor currently uses the parcel as a stockpile area at the intersection of lower King Street and Route 3A, which is generally considered to be an eyesore. Its use as a construction yard predates zoning and is therefore, grandfathered.

At the hearing, Rosano told the zoning board that he was embarrassed by the look of the property and would like to improve it. Rosano's attorney argued that using the land to house the proposed structure was far more beneficial to the neighborhood and the town. He also asked that Rosano be able to display from one to three used cars for sale at the corner of the lot facing 3A.

In its June 12 decision, the zoning board denied any zoning relief for the site, which is zoned residential. Members said the zoning bylaw precludes businesses or multi-family use in residential districts. The board said the proposed use would be a burden on the lot and incompatible with the neighborhood.

Skippers ousted by Westwood

Cohasset loses one step shy of Div. 2 South final four

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While the Cohasset girls tennis team lost 3-2 to Westwood in the Div. 2 South quarterfinals last Wednesday, the game marked as much a beginning as it did an ending.

The match cemented the emergence of freshman Lindsay Grossman as a force to be reckoned with in high school tennis.

Playing at number two singles, Grossman dropped her first set of the year to Westwood's Melissa White, 6-2, but Grossman played with a poise which belied her youth, coming back to win the next two sets 6-3, 6-1.

For the next three years, Cohasset coach Gigi Meehan will likely have the pleasure of watching the talented Grossman play number one singles, as Kate Stone, her first singles player for the last four years, has graduated.

Stone lost her last scholastic match to Westwood's outstanding Ari Hoch, 6-2, 6-0, but the loss did nothing to diminish her phenomenal high school tennis career.

The match was actually much closer than the score would indicate, with most games only decided by a couple of points.

"I think it was pretty close throughout the whole match," said the Columbia-bound Hoch. "I don't think the score really reflects the way the match was going. I just think I was able to reach down and hit the shots when i needed to."

During Stone's tenure at first singles, the Skippers reeled off 28 straight South Shore League wins and won three SSL titles.

"Kate's been an amazing player for us," Meehan said. "She's been with us since the eighth grade. She's such a steady player."

With Grossman stepping in for Stone, this year's third singles player, freshman Julie Shea, could move up to second singles.

Shea provided Cohasset a point against Westwood, teaming with senior Jessie Zerendow at first doubles instead of her usual third singles position. Shea and Zerendow prevailed against the Wolves' Lizzie Cushing and Haleh Kazemi

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse completes best season ever

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program closed out its best season ever winning seven games and losing two at the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League Jamboree on June 11.

The effort was led by a three-game sweep by Cohasset's 14-and-under team, which closed out its season at 10-3; the 12-and-under and 10-and-under teams both lost their first games of the day, but rebounded to win the last two. The 12-and-under team finished its season at 10-4, while the 10-and-under program finished its first season with a record of 9-1-1.

"This was our most successful season yet, not only in terms of victories but in terms of what the players accomplished all year," says Chuck Jaffee, coordinator of the program and head coach of the two older teams. "The 14-and-under

Legion club off to hot start

Program rising from the ashes

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Just five years ago, Scott Arnold resurrected a Cohasset-Scituate American Legion baseball team which had been discontinued 17 years earlier.

The team suffered some serious growing pains, going 3-17 in 1996, 4-16 in 1997, 5-15 in 1998 and 7-13 last season.

This year, however, the team has risen from the ashes, posting a 3-2 record in the early season, even without four starters who have been playing with BC High in its run for the Eastern Mass. title.

"The goal is to make the playoffs for the first time since we brought the program back."
Legion coach Scott Arnold

"The goal is to make the playoffs for the first time since we brought the program back," Arnold said.

To reach that goal, the team will have to finish in the top five of in the nine-team District 6, which includes two Quincy teams, Milton, Canton, Randolph, Braintree and Weymouth. The reason the Legion team plays those towns as opposed to nearby towns like Hingham and Norwell is its placement in a Norfolk County district.

One strength of the team thus far has been its starting pitching, even without lefthander Tom Fitzgerald, who pitches for BC High. Cohasset's Nick Bolster and Greg

Captains named for 2000-2001 boys and girls squads

Providence College all-time scoring leader Kenneth Leahy received the first Founders' Award on June 5, highlighting the annual season-ending Cohasset Lacrosse Boosters break-up dinner.

Leahy, a 1996 graduate of Cohasset High and former Skipper captain, said that he was honored to be the first recipient of the award.

"I'd like to think that all of you players here tonight have the ability to achieve what I've done," Leahy told the more than 100 attendees, including members of both the boys and girls varsity teams. "If you are willing to make the commitment and put in the effort, you'll be surprised at what you can accomplish."

A two-time captain of the Providence men's lacrosse team, Leahy broke the career scoring record this spring with a three-goal game against Brown University, and finished with 191 points, including two goals and three assists in his final game against Albany. He was selected to play in New England's East-West College All-Star Game as well.

Sailing Club celebrates 40th anniversary

By David Kusek
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Sailing Club is breezing into its 40th year of service to the Cohasset community with a completely refurbished fleet of boats. Since 1960, the Cohasset Sailing Club has provided low cost sail training for children and adults. The club is all volunteer organization entirely supported by memberships. The club receives no funding from the town.

Families can sign up for a season of sailing for only $125. "Our program gives people an extremely cost effective way to get out on the water," said Peter Pescatore, Club Treasurer.

Pescatore added that the club is trying to increase its membership.

"We had upwards of 300 kids training in the old days," he said. "The last few seasons we had only 200 kids or so enrolled in the classes. We would like to get a lot more families involved in our programs and hope that many of the newcomers to town will be able to take advantage of all that we offer".

A small and well-managed organization, the club's entire budget goes towards sail training, repairs and member services. There are even a few scholarships available for children whose families can't afford the nominal fees for training.

The club offers a full race program and adult training in addition to its classes for children. All levels of sailors are welcome from landlubbers to experienced racers. The newly refurbished fleet consists of 10 Mercurys, eight Turnabouts, three Flying Scots and a few 420s. Club members are always looking for crew to race the Flying Scots every Saturday during the season.

Local author pens Boston mountain biking guide

By Brian Brennan
Staff Writer

If you're excited about the chance to finally enjoy the outdoors after the long winter and a rainy spring, local author Jeff Cutler has some ideas for you.

The Hingham native and former Cohasset Mariner correspondent has authored "Mountain Bike America: Boston," a guide to 29 of the most scenic rides throughout eastern Massachusetts. He will be signing copies of the book on Saturday, June 17 from 10 a.m. to 12 noon at Buttonwood Books and Toys on Route 3A in Cohasset and will be available to answer questions as well.

Cutler spent nearly four years researching and writing the guide, which features topographic maps of each ride and elevation charts to show riders how high or far they will travel.

The book, part of a series of mountain biking guides published by Globe Pequot Press, was a labor of love for Cutler, a mountain biking enthusiast since his grandmother gave him his first mountain bike in 1995.

"It took a lot of weekends," Cutler said of the project, which covers rides within the Interstate 495 loop. "I went out to most places twice to get the pictures we needed for the guide."

In addition to the thousands of miles he put on his pick up truck going out to different mountain biking sites, Cutler also put some wear and tear on his body. He twice broke his right collarbone during what he considers the most enjoyable of all the rides in the book, in his own hometown's Wompatuck State Park.

"Despite the broken bones, the Wompatuck ride is still my favorite," Cutler laughed.

One of the unique aspects of Cutler's mountain biking guide is the detail which he goes into to give readers a flavor and history of the places where they'll be riding.

In his description of the Wompatuck ride, he tells readers of Eleanor Roosevelt's fondness for the beauty of Hingham's Main Street and also describes the furor of some town residents a few years back for daring to display colored Christmas lights.

Cutler goes on to describe the history of George's Island as a training facility during the Civil War and as a prison for captured Confederates, while noting that it makes a great picnic spot after a long ride through Wompatuck.

All of the rides in the book are painstakingly mapped out, letting riders see where they'll be taking turns and where to watch out for hazards on the trails.

Cutler also tells readers of the difficulty of the rides, allowing bikers to challenge themselves without riding trails which my be too dangerous for those without a great deal of experience.

"You don't want someone going out there and getting over their head, but if something's a really easy ride, it's not going to be fun for someone who rides a great deal," he said. "The difficulty ratings let riders determine which rides are right for them."

Jeff Cutler, a former Cohasset Mariner correspondent, in his biking gear.

In addition to his favorite ride at Wompatuck State Park, Cutler said he also has a soft spot in his heart for the first ride in the book, an 8.7-mile trip through Boston which begins at the Boston Public Library.

"The Boston ride is fantastic," said Cutler of a loop which goes along the Charles River and passes through landmarks such as the Boston Common and Kenmore Square. "It's great to see all the history in the city, especially for tourists."

Now that the four-year project is complete, Cutler is pursuing other writing projects in addition to his full-time job as a writer for Fidelity's company website in Boston. He recently appeared on WATD in Marshfield to read a children's story he is working on.

"Right now, I'm trying to find a designer for it," he said of his first children's fiction project. "It's about a pair of kids, Tony and Laura, and their adventures both in the city and the suburbs."

Cutler said he is also developing a murder mystery screenplay. In the meantime, he is enjoying the promotion of the mountain biking guide, his first published book.

"Putting this book together was probably the most rewarding and difficult project I've ever done," he said. "But it's given me an education in the history and landscape of Massachusetts. I'd gladly suffer the late nights and broken bones again."

Sailing Club celebrates anniversary

The club recently embarked on a fundraising program. "The boats had not been refurbished for over 20 years," says Pescatore. "Our goal is to raise $30,000 and we have raised $19,000 to date."

The club mailed an appeal to all Cohasset residents last fall and received $17,000 in donations, almost entirely from individuals who reached into their pockets and gave between $25 to $50. Several generous families have come forward and donated enough money to have individual boats named according to their wishes.

A follow-up mailing to local businesses in March netted only $2,500 dollars, with $2,000 of that coming from the Rotary Club. The Sailing Club is hoping that more local businesses will consider sponsoring individual boats. "It is a great opportunity to advertise your business on a boat and support a great community club," says Ann Musto the club's Vice-Commodore. The club hopes some of the larger companies in town will lend a hand. For a donation of $2,000, anyone can name a boat.

The Sailing Club has used the majority of the funds it received to refurbish its fleet of boats, something it has been struggling to do for many years. All of the Mercurys were completely reconditioned with new hardware, new woodwork, fittings, inside and out, with new gel coating, and are in brand new condition. The 8 Turnabouts were also gel coated with some new hardware. The repairs were a major expense for the club, but repairing the boats was much more economical than spending $8,000 apiece for new vessels.

According to Pescatore, "Our fleet is being brought up to first class sailing condition. This is a huge improvement over the condition of the boats during the past couple of years and should make the club a lot more enjoyable for our members. We have boats to be proud of, and we want to get the kids out there and let them have fun. You know, a day spent on the water is not deducted from your time on earth."

Pescatore said that the backbone of the Sailing Club is a core of volunteers, many of whom have been involved with the club since its inception.

"Chuck Peterson, Kevin McDonald, Herb Towle, Don Baccari, Larry Mitchell, Bob Davenport and many, many other people have been working hard on the club for a lot of years," Pescatore said. "All the repair work done this past year will give everybody a blow. The club's a real community effort, and the old members all pitch in to keep the club going. It's a little known and little appreciated Cohasset treasure, a jewel. The people who started this club who are still around, are still active in it, 40 years later."

Herb Towle, one of the club's founding members, is still very active on the waterfront. He and the other founders borrowed the sailing club concept from the Boston Community Sailing program on the Charles River and brought it down to Cohasset. At 80 years old, Herb still helps put the docks in and always checks to make sure that the floats don't get dragged out to sea.

What does the club still need?

"We would like to begin to replace the racing boats. The 420s need refurbishing just like the Mercurys and the Turnabouts did," said Pescatore. With more capital, the Club will expand its training programs, hire more professional staff, buy some rowing dingys for use in the harbor and possibly get a bigger sailboat for advanced training.

All donations are tax deductible. Contact the Cohasset Sailing Club P.O. Box 111, Cohasset, MA 02025 or visit the Clubhouse at Government Island after July 1st or on any weekend. For club info contact Ann Musto at 383-0401. For donation information contact Peter Pescatore at 383-2660.

O'Keeffe, who both threw no-hitters during the high school season, have been joined by Scituate's Jesse Cole and Tim Duggan on a deep starting staff.

"In five games, we've used six pitchers," Arnold said. "We've pitched unbelievably well thus far."

The team possesses outstanding depth in its lineup, especially when the BC High players return. The most high-profile Eagle returning will be center fielder Mike Conroy, who led the Catholic Conference in hitting and has been an offensive sparkplug in the state tournament.

Two other BC High starters, second baseman Chris Ferris and first baseman Greg Smith, will start for the Legion team when they return, Arnold said.

Still, their replacements aren't too shabby, either. Cohasset's Doug O'Brien, a South Shore League all-star, has manned center field, while Scituate's Josh Creighton has filled in at first base and been one of the team's best hitters. On Monday night, Creighton gave the team an 8-7 win over Quincy with a base hit in the bottom of the seventh inning.

The team is also stocked at catcher, where Scitaute's David Butterworth starts and is backed up by Cohasset's Tim Straughan.

"Tim's done a great job for us," Arnold said. "I don't like to rotate my catchers, and Butterworth's an outstanding defensive catcher. Not much ever gets by him. So Tim's played first base, third base and been a DH for us. He's been great all season."

The left side of the infield has also been strong this season. Cole, a Patriot League all-star, mans third base, while Bolster plays shortstop on days when he doesn't pitch.

Only a sophomore, Bolster is the kind of player who has allowed the Legion squad to make the long climb from the bottom of the standings to playoff contention.

"Cohasset and Scituate don't have a lot of kids to draw from," Arnold said. "They're just not big towns. To be successful, we've got to get kids like Bolster at 14 or 15 into the program."

Other key contributors to the team this season have been Scituate's Jason Connelly at second base, Tim Duggan in left field and Cohasset's Dan Mulligan in right field.

With the talent on the way from BC High, this year's Cohasset-Scituate Legion team has a chance to be the best baseball fans in the towns have seen in a long while.

"The great thing about coaching Legion is you get to pick and choose your players," Arnold said. "I can't wait to play the rest of the season. The team's done a heck of a job, and we've been missing three starters in the lineup and a starting pitcher. I'm excited about it."

Fans wishing to see the team will have two chances next week, as it will play home games at Cohasset High School on Monday and Tuesday. Both games will get underway at 5:45 p.m.

group had to get by after losing a great offensive player, Michael Rasmussen, to injury early in the season. Two-thirds of the 12-and-under team were brand new players, which is usually a recipe for a losing season, and the 10-and-under kids had never played a game before. At every level, the players exceeded our expectations both with their effort and the results."

The Cohasset 14-and-under squad started and ended its season with shutouts and, in between, earned a reputation for being a tough and tenacious defensive team. Throughout the season, Cohasset played an up-tempo defensive style, employing several college-level defenses to stymie opponents and let the offense carry the day.

Long-stick defenders Dan Roth, Reed Smith, Conor Buick, Stephen Davis, Casey Coleman and Kirby Bukowski—playing positions that don't normally get the credit—were the heart and soul of a team that averaged giving up less than four goals per game. Goalkeeper Nick Murphy provided the backbone, stopping 106 shots and fashioning a .680 save percentage, but also shutting the door in several close games. "Nick has a knack for making the spectacular save look routine," said Jaffe. "He was so good that he allowed us to be a lot more aggressive, knowing that he would bail us out of the occasional mistake." Murphy was picked as an alternate to the MBYLL 14-and-under all-star team.

Offensively, many players stepped in to fill the void left when Rasmussen went down after two games. Michael Devine led the way with 26 goals and seven assists for 33 points, while Paul Digan contributed 14 goals and 11 assists for 25 points. Jake Previte—who will represent Cohasset on the MBYLL 12-and-under all-star team this summer—scored 21 goals and two assists.

The rest of the scoring for the 14-and-under team went as follows: Ryan Tufts (11 goals, 4 assists, 15 points), John Grimm (0-9-9), Mark Davis (5-3-8), Rasmussen (6-1-7), Mike Hajjar (3-3-6), Sam Steele (3-1-4), Chris Barber (2-1-3), Jake Kovach (0-3-3), Mark Donovan (2-0-2), Joey Durkin (2-0-2), Jonathan Littauer (2-0-2), Mike Geddes (1-1-2), Andrew O'Keeffe (0-2-2), Dan Roth (0-2-2), Malcolm Stansell (1-0-1), Colin Regan (1-0-1), Stephen Davis (0-1-1).

Murphy, Roth, Mark Davis and Devine were selected by to represent the South Shore area at the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League All-Star Jamboree in Beverly.

Cohasset's 12-and-under squad raised the bar for virtually every measure of success in 2000. The team had the most victories, scored the most goals, had the most assists, had the highest percentage of assisted goals, and the biggest number of players scoring points of any team in the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program's six-year history.

That effort was led by Aidan Buick, whose 39 goals and 17 assists gave him 56 points, a record season at the 12-and-under level (beating the 53 points scored by Rasmussen in 1998). Combined with his 23 points in 1999, Buick became the program's all-time leading scorer at the 12-and-under level.

But Buick was far from alone on a team which averaged just more than 10 goals per game. Attackman Michael Bunstein chipped in 19 goals and four assists for 23 points, with linemate Toffer Noering contributing 12 goals and two assists. Jared Kinch led midfielders in scoring with 15 goals and three assists.

The rest of the 12-and-under scoring: Corey Chase (7 goals, 4 assists, 11 points), Zach Etkind (7-2-9), Trevor Brady (7-2-9), Austen Lanzillotti (7-1-8), Jeff Brown (5-3-8), Danny Sullivan (4-1-5), Keith Mier (4-0-4), Kyle Goines (2-0-2), Mike Barnes (2-0-2), Dan Trendowicz (1-1-2), Mike Pecca (1-1-2), Peter Oswald (1-1-2), Kyle Dattola-Harris (1-1-2), Mike Martone (1-0-1), Parker Berg (1-0-1), T. J. Kennedy (1-0-1), Robert Hertig (0-1-1) and Jared Dick (0-1-1).

The defense was manned all season by Barnes, Pecca, Patrick Flynn, Bobby Meikleham, Ryan Kucinski and Robert Silvia. Jared Dick and Sam Parker split goaltending duties; Dick, who shut out Braintree in May, finished the season with 77 saves and a .653 save percentage, while Parker had 60 stops and a .583 mark.

"Jared and Sam kept us in a bunch of games until our offense could take over," noted Jaffe. "Their contribution, and that of the defense, is easy to overlook when a team scores this many goals."

Barnes, Brady, Buick, Etkind, Pecca and Sullivan were selected to play in the MBYLL All-Star Jamboree.

Jaffe noted that what separated the 2000 12-and-under teams from past ones "wasn't the record, so much as the camaraderie and the spirit. These guys genuinely pulled for each other. They got along, and they picked each other up. They didn't hog the ball, they were never afraid to pass it to an open teammate and that made us tough to defend and contributed to so many kids getting points this year. I hope they maintain that spirit as they progress in lacrosse."

The biggest story of the season may have come from the littlest players, as Cohasset fielded a 10-and-under team for the first time. Under the direction of Curt Mills, Bill Grimm and Bill Bell, the team went 7-0-1 during its regular season coming from behind in games against Duxbury and Scituate to stay unbeaten up to the jamboree.

Losing its first game in the jamboree, the boys rebounded to two decisive wins, the second a 12-0 shutout over Dorchester.

"Our guys excelled when they needed to, really coming together to get the job done," said Mills. "It was an exciting season, where the kids all learned a lot, and we got contributions from everyone."

Statistics were not available from the 10-and-under games, but the 10-and-under team included: Andrew Bell, Danny Brady, Oliver Brennan, Matthew Burgess, Logan Chase, Justin Connors, Ryan Connors, Charlie Czerkawski, Ramsey Davis, Peter Ernst, Mark Flibotte, Teddy Galligan, Michael Grimm, Brian Hill, Justin Hollis, Brendan Hughes, Tyler Kelly, Mike Kusek, Owen Landon, Thomas Lemaire, Eric MacCarthy, Chris Mills, Nathan Porter, Chris Rose, Alexander Shipp, Gordon Smith, Wesley Ulmer and Frank Wheelwright.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse intends to field teams at each age level next year and may field two 12-and-under squads. Jaffe notes that the need for additional coaches is growing and that he would like to see the program start a girls team, to be affiliated with a regional girls league, at the fifth- and sixth-grade level. Anyone interested in supporting or coaching the program can contact Jaffe at 383-9858.

coach Paul Sporn noted that Buick had been selected by the eastern Massachusetts coaches for a statewide junior all-star game.

Sporn, who announced his resignation after the dinner, and girls coach Kathy Gaudiano concluded the festivities at Kimball's by announcing the 2001 captains for the two teams. Leading the boys, said Sporn, will be Buick, defenseman Geoff McWilliams and midfielder Lane Forrer. The girls, said Gaudiano, will be captained by a pair of juniors — attacker and this year's high-scorer Kristin Sheerin and defensive wing Carlie Carter.

"While neither of our varsities made the tournament this year," said Boosters' president David Buick, "they had some wonderful results, and competed against the best teams in the state. We're very proud of their accomplishments, and extremely excited about our prospects in 2001."

6-2, 6-4.

Meehan switched Shea to first doubles because of the absence of junior Ary Afshar, who normally teams with Zerendow.

The move worked, as the Skippers took the point at first singles, but inexperienced freshman Molly Flanagan was pressed into service in Shea's number three singles slot.

Unfortunately, Westwood possessed great depth in its lineup, and its third singles player, Kara Kouri, who is ranked in New England, won in straight sets 6-1, 6-0.

Coming into the match, Meehan couldn't have hoped for a better scenario, especially with Afshar out of the lineup. With two points won, she would need only a win from her second doubles tandem of sophomore Kelly Stone and junior Jessica Niessink to win the match.

Stone and Niessink were undefeated on the season coming in, but fell behind early and were unable to recover against Westwood's Caryn Brune and Michelle Lew, losing 6-2, 6-2.

"My second doubles team was off today, which was too bad," Meehan said after the match. "I always get a point at second. First is iffy because it's a much tougher position. And my third singles [Shea] always wins too, so it was tough to pull her out of a position where I always knew I had a win."

Still, Cohasset's performance with a key player out of the lineup was commendable. With two freshman playing key roles and Kelly Stone and Afshar back next year, the Skippers appear to be loaded again.

Had a couple of breaks gone their way, and the Skippers beaten Westwood, Cohasset may have actually gone a lot further. Westwood went on to blitz top-seeded Bourne in the South semifinals and made it all the way to the state final, which the Wolves lost to Winchester.

Still, making it to the South quarterfinals is a tremendous accomplishment, and with the emergence of its underclassmen, the future is looking extremely bright for Cohasset girls tennis.

Hingham woman married the boss at Stone & Webster

Few knew of local connection to former engineering giant

By John Connell
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

In recent weeks the Stone & Webster Corp. (S&W) has been appearing very often in the financial pages of the country's newspapers. Headlines such as "S&W shares take a tumble," "S&W shares fall upon new 99 charge," "Staggered by cash flow problems, S&W seeks buyer," and finally on May 10, "S&W sold to Jacobs." By now the stock had dropped from a lofty $90 a share to around $3.25 and the New York Stock Exchange said that trading in S&W Inc. would be suspended immediately. Many were shocked that this 111-year-old company — at one time considered the largest engineering firm in the world — had come to an end.

The company was founded in 1889 by Charles Augustus Stone and Edwin Webster. The two had met at MIT when they were both freshmen, and become best friends. They referred to themselves as "Electricals" but today would be called electrical engineering majors. They graduated from MIT in June of 1888. (Years later a company executive would describe the difference between the two as the way they entered a conference room. Stone charged into a meeting and Webster sauntered in).

It was said that Edwin's mother had suggested that since Charles and Edwin got along so well that they should go into business as partners. Evidently they heeded her advice and opened up for business in two small rooms on the second floor of Post Office Square, Boston. At that time, they were known as Massachusetts Electrical Engineering Company. In no time they were doing extremely well, and were in need of a secretary. The Chandler Secretarial School was contacted. The school at that time was one large room, and the subjects were taught by Miss Chandler. She selected and sent one of her brightest girls to be interviewed – enter Mary Agnes Leonard of Hingham, later to become Mary Adams Stone of Boston. (There would be numerous people that worked for Stone & Webster, including many from Hingham that never knew the founder's wife was born and raised in Hingham, however, it was well known by most of the secretaries at S&W that Mary had married the boss).

The first present he gave her was a Humboldt bicycle which she soon rode to Cohasset to show her cousins.

On August 18, 1873, Mary Agnes (her middle name later became Adams) was born to William and Margaret (Keefe) Leonard in Hingham. She was their firstborn, and later were to follow two sisters, and six brothers. Her father had two sisters that married a Whelan and a Riley of Hingham. When Mary was a young girl, her father bought a house on Emerald Street. The stone wall in front of her house was built by her father, who was a stonemason. Her mother had a sister, Hannah Connell, who lived on North Street, and a sister, Ellen Downs, who lived on James Lane in Cohasset and her brother, William Keefe, who lived on North Main Street in Cohasset. Mary would visit with her many cousins, her Aunt Hannah's six daughters and two sons. (Mary often said that Aunt Hannah made the best biscuits in the world) and in Cohasset, her Aunt Ellen had four daughters, and Uncle Bill had two daughters and three sons. Mary attended schools in Hingham, and graduated from the first high school, a wooden structure located on Central Street near Cold Corner. About this time women were starting to move into careers in stenography, which had previously been dominated by men. After graduation from high school, this career took her to Boston to attend the Chandler School. As previously mentioned, she went to work at Stone & Webster, and after a time began seeing Charlie socially. The first present he gave her was a Humboldt bicycle which she soon rode to Cohasset to show her cousins.

Elizabeth Leonard Murray

Mary's sister Margaret died in 1875 at age two, and five years later her brother Jeremiah died at the same age. In 1904, her brother John Francis died. He was 20 years old, and was attending MIT. Had he lived, no doubt he would have had a promising career with S &W. Three of her brothers, William, James and Charlie, worked for S & W at various times, but her brother Albert formed his own Real Estate Company in Santa Monica, Calif., and was very successful. (One of his claims to fame was he arranged the construction and sale of the famous silent screen start Marion Davies' beach home, at the request of William Randolph Hearst.) William and James would also settle in California, and Charlie eventually settled in Virginia. Elizabeth "Lizzie" was four years younger than Mary, and the two sisters would remain very close. Elizabeth would be the only sibling that would stay in Hingham her entire life. She married in later life to Francis J. Murray of Hingham. They had no children. Mary's and Elizabeth's father died in 1929, however, their mother went on to live until a month after her 101st birthday in 1955. Elizabeth's husband died in 1950 and Elizabeth (whose nickname Lizzie seemed to fade away and was replaced by Bess) in 1968, at the age of 90. She and her husband were very involved and generous in helping to form the Hingham Civic Orchestra.

Mary's friendship with Charlie became serious, and it appeared the two would be married. There was a major problem, however.....he was Protestant and she was Roman Catholic. (Keep in mind that at the turn of the century, this was a serious situation). At any rate, they were married on June 3, 1902 at the Somerset Hotel in Boston, the ceremony being performed by a justice of the peace. This further problem compounded the religious issue with some of her relatives and especially her mother. The only relative at the wedding was Mary's sister Elizabeth. After a short time, Mary's parents sent out a formal announcement of the marriage. The enclosure card read: "Mr. and Mrs. Charles Augustus Stone will be at home after October 1, 1902 at 'Rocky Point' Plymouth, Massachusetts. It would appear from that time on, Mary's religious affiliations would be that of her husband's.

Part II: The move to South Street in Hingham, Mary's four children, her many homes, her son Whitney's close association with Jessie Cox, and the U.S. Equestrian team.

Cohasset rowing begins its 10th year

Ten short years ago a joint venture between Cohasset High School and the Hull Lifesaving Museum re-established traditional fixed seat rowing in Cohasset when the John Warren II was restored and launched. Over the years, numerous students and adults have plied the waters of the harbor as many readers can recollect. Out of this new-found love of rowing, Cohasset Maritime Institute was born, and, in 1996, efforts to restore the boathouse on the Haggerty Property began. This summer, CMI will complete its boathouse project and once again re-invigorate the rowing community with the introduction of two sliding seat, coxed-fours on loan to CMI from MIT.

"These boats are fast and fun to row," said John Liffmann, the veteran youth coach and rowing aficionado who was instrumental in securing these boats for use in Cohasset. Veteran and novice rowers alike looking to get (back) behind a sweep oar for their workouts and for an adventurous season on the water should contact CMI members Jack Buckley (383-8261) or Steve Daly (383-9392) for information about membership.

Additional boats available for CMI members are two Gloucester Gulls, fast dories built at the high school by students in the maritime studies program. The John Warren II, the 26' "double-ender" surf boat, and her yet to be named counterpart in the high school shop, will, unfortunately not find their way into the water this season. Mike McNabb, however, has made a generous offer to CMI to make the Dragonfly available for use, thereby keeping CMI's big boat program alive. Boat building enthusiasts and craftsmen are needed to assist in the work needed to get the other boats ready for launching.

Finally, CMI will again collaborate with the high shool this summer in offering an "Introduction to Maritime Studies," a science credit course for which openings still exist. In addition to learning traditional maritime skills and history aboard the Dragonfly, students will study oceanography and engage in water quality studies in Cohasset Harbor. Parents or students interested in this program should contact either the guidance counselors, or Jack Buckley, at the high school.

track, and ended 21 hours later with noontime closing ceremonies, featuring WCVB-TV's Anthony Everett, a Cohasset resident. According to Kate Langstone, a spokesman for the American Cancer Society, $98,000 was raised at the Cohasset walk, exceeding the goal of $90,000 that organizers had hoped for. More money is expected to come in over the next couple of weeks.

The scene at 3 p.m. resembled the first day of summer camp. Carload after carload of participants arrived at the high school and trekked with their tents, coolers, sleeping bags and food up to the field, as a DJ spun tunes.

Anna Abbruzzese, captain of the 18-member Starlights, was also in attendance at the start. In her fourth year captaining the team, she said she was "very heartened" that people called her this year to participate.

"Everyone has had a grandparent, brother, sister, who has been affected by cancer," she said adding that she had lost a family member this past year to the disease.

Sandy DiGiacomo and her Hingham Middle School squad walked this year for one of their own. Paul Kelly, a member of the staff at the school and past-team captain, is battling lung cancer. This year's team of 25 school staff members brought in $1,600 by 3:30 p.m., just a tad shy of DiGiacomo's goal of $2,000, with half of her team's pledges counted.

"This is a really worthy cause," DiGiacomo said explaining her team's decision to give up their weekend. "Many have been affected personally. My mother died of cancer. Most people on the team have been touched in some way."

One of the highlights of the evening was the survivors' lap, where cancer survivors grouped together and walked a symbolic lap around the track in a show of resilience. Langstone said 600 people registered for the lap, one of whom was Karen Burns of Weymouth. She was diagnosed with cancer of the larynx at the age of 46, after having smoked since the age of 18. Now, at the age of 52, and having to use a voice prosthetic after her laryngectomy, she explained her decision to participate.

"Because of what happened to me, it gives me a chance to give back and help others," Burns said. In her fifth year of participating, Burns helped register those who took part in the survivors' lap, which included herself. To her, the survivors' lap is special. "There are some survivors, and there are some still in treatment. It's very emotional."

Luminaria were sold throughout the day, memorializing those fighting or who had lost battles with cancer. By 1:30 a.m. the track at Cohasset was completely surrounded with more than 3,500 bags; a testament to the pervasiveness of the disease.

The field in the early hours of Saturday morning was different than Friday afternoon, yet the same. A single lamp on each set of field lights kept the field lit, while the small tent city still buzzed with activity as teams sat in circles and chatted. But the track was still being circled by dozens of walkers, some wearing headphones, some dribbling soccer balls, some holding hands and some just enjoying the warm night.

Kate Henderson of Cohasset and Kathleen Riley of Abington, both 15, fell into the latter category. Kate raised $1,600 along with the a group of students from Notre Dame Academy in Hingham that she mobilized, and had been walking for the past two-and-a-half hours with Kathleen. Kate said she participated in the walk last year, and decided to put a team together this year and plans on bringing a "huge group" next year. Both girls had been at the event all night and said that the survivors' lap really touched them.

"It was real emotional," said Kathleen. "I thought about my grandmother and she survived and I kind of wished she could have come her and participated. And then my neighbor who died and left a two-year old boy and my mom is kind of his second mom now."

Margie Hillman, an overnight nurse at South Shore Hospital, said she volunteered to work the overnight shift at the relay for her team, the Cohasset Kickers. The Kickers were organized by Nancy St. John and consisted of 35 members of the Cohasset Soccer Club, who last year raised $4,500.

"The day [the Cohasset Kickers] walked last year, was the day my father-in-law died of cancer," Hillman said explaining why she came out. "When I look at all the luminaria and realize how much cancer has affected so many families, it's really tremendous…and if I can take part of time and help track down sponsors and help find a cure then that will be wonderful."

The career of Rear Admiral Herbert John Grassie, U.S.N.

LOOKING BACK

DAVID WADSWORTH

Herbert John Grassie, son of John J. and Caroline Elizabeth (Naegle) Grassie, was born in Cohasset, at 6 Parker Ave., Dec. 12, 1894. John J. Grassie served for a number of years on the Cohasset town Night Police force. Within a few years the Grassies were living on Pleasant Street, then at 55 Cushing Rd., Cohasset. Herbert J. Grassie graduated from Cohasset High School in 1912, then was chosen to attend the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., from which he graduated in 1916. Upon graduation, newly commissioned Lieutenant Grassie was assigned first to the U.S.S. Pennsylvania, then during World War I he made 12 round trips across the Atlantic aboard the Navy transport Tenadores, carrying troops to Europe. He also served as Executive Officer on the early U.S. Navy destroyer Smith (DD 17) convoying troops to France. Herbert J. Grassie became a Lieutenant Senior Grade on the destroyer U.S.S. DeLong and on the battleship U.S S. Oklahoma.

On March 2, 1923, Lieut. Grassie married Angela Sullivan, and in 1923 and 1924 was a student at the Naval War College, Newport, R.I. Following that, and until 1926 he was assigned to the distant "China Station," that is, U.S. Naval forces operating in Far Eastern and Chinese waters. He served first aboard U.S. gunboat U.S.S. Helena, then as Commanding Officer on the aircraft tender U.S.S. Heron until October of 1926. Following the Far Eastern tour, he served for some time as a recruiting officer in Springfield, Mass., then became a Lieutenant Commander and Assistant Gunnery Officer on the battleship U.S.S. Wyoming, flagship of the Atlantic Fleet.

In 1931 Lieut. Commander Grassie became Instructor of Navigation and Seamanship at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, serving there until 1934, when he was assigned as Chief Engineer aboard the battleship U.S.S. California. From 1935 to 1937 Herbert J. Grassie was the Commanding Officer of the destroyers U.S.S. Humphrey (DD 236), then McDonough (DD 351). From 1937 to 1940 he was assigned to the office of the Chief of Naval Operations, Washington D.C., as a Commander. Following that, he served as Executive Officer of the battleship U.S.S. Nevada until 1941, being promoted to Captain in October 1940. Both battleships Nevada and California were among those ships that were heavily damaged in the Dec. 7, 1941, attack upon Pearl Harbor but served to fight later in the war. Of his earlier vessels, battleship Oklahoma was one of only two large vessels actually lost in the Pearl Harbor attack, but battleship Pennsylvania survived to serve later.

Shortly after the outbreak of World War II, Capt. Grassie became Commanding Officer of the Navy transport U.S.S. J. Franklin Bell (formerly the President Line vessel President McKinley), serving in the Aleutian Islands campaign against occupying Japanese forces. Back in the continental U.S. from 1942 to July 1944 he headed the Logistics Division of the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations. In July 1944 he became Commanding Officer of the battleship U.S.S. Idaho (BB 42), one of the several older battleships (OBB's) serving as escort and bombardment vessel for amphibious landings in the Pacific. As Commanding Officer of Idaho, Capt. Grassie served at the amphibious landings and battles at the islands of Saipan, Tinian, Peleliu, Guam, Iwo Jima and Okinawa.

After the end of World War II, Capt. Grassie was given the rank of Commodore and assigned Commander of the U.S. Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill., described as "the largest such center in the world, with 110,000 officers and men on duty there." In 1949 Capt. Grassie was given the rank of Rear Admiral, U.S N., and retired in that year, following 37 years of service. He received numerous decorations and medals resulting from his service in the Pacific war and in Washington D.C. After retirement from the Navy, Adm. Grassie became President of Lewis College, Lockport, Ill., for five years before his final retirement in 1954 to Coronado, Calif. A few years earlier Adm. Grassie had listed his home address as 55 Cushing Rd., Cohasset; the home of his parents.

To his family and those who knew him well, Adm. Grassie was known by his nickname, "Count" Grassie. In 1992 Admiral Grassie's personal career records, beginning with his arrival at Annapolis and including souvenir and clippings scrapbooks, original orders (some signed by Franklin Delano Roosevelt as Secretary of the Navy), and photograph albums (including pictures of actual battle scenes taken during amphibious landings at Iwo Jima and Okinawa, while aboard U.S.S. Idaho, and numerous showing the Great Lakes Training Station) were given to the Historical Society by his son Herbert John Grassie Jr. Those valued records form an important part of the society's historical archive relating to Cohasset's most significant citizens of the past.

Cohasset carillon

The 76th Annual Series of Summer Carillon Recitals will be given on the 57-bell Taylor carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, Massachusetts, on eight successive Sunday evenings from 6-7 p.m., beginning June 25 and continuing through Aug. 13. The public is invited to attend free of charge, and may bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers. Printed programs and brochures describing the carillon will be available in a stand by the church courtyard on Highland Avenue, and will also be handed out on Cohasset Common and at other prime listening places mentioned on the back of the program. In case of rain, the recitals may be heard from parked cars. The church is situated on a cliff overlooking Main Street and the Cohasset Common. This is the longest continuously-running summer carillon recital series in North America, having begun when the first 23 bells of the carillon were installed in 1924.

The first program will be performed June 25 by Marcel Siebers of Cuyk, The Netherlands. Siebers will play original compositions for carillon by de Klerk and Siebers, transcriptions from the works of Bach, Haydn, Debussy and Beethoven, and arrangements of tunes from Walt Disney films.

Other recitalists on successive Sunday evenings will be as follows: July 2, Daniel Kerry Kehoe, Carillonneur of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.; July 9, Ann-Kirstine Christiansen of Arhus, Denmark; July 16, Ulla Laage, Carillonneur of Our Savior's Church, Copenhagen, Denmark; July 23, David Maker, Carillonneur of the University of Connecticut at Storrs; July 30, J. Samuel Hammond, Carillonneur of Duke University in Durham, N.C., whose son John will be performing with him; Aug. 6, Sally Slade Warner, Carillonneur of St. Stephen's, Cohasset; and finally, Aug. 13, Gijsbert Kok of Bodegraven, The Netherlands. Following each recital will be a tower tour and carillon demonstration for those interested, including a chance for visitors to play a tune on the instrument.

For more information, call Sally Slade Warner at 978/475-2599, or Mary Kennedy, Assistant Carillonneur of St. Stephen's, at 781/383-9599, or the church office, 781/383-1083.

45th annual arts festival to kick off Friday

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

On Friday afternoon, the 45th annual Festival on the Common will kick off, with more than 8,000 visitors expected to descend upon Cohasset Town Common during the weekend-long event.

The South Shore Art Center's annual fine arts, crafts and music celebration expects as big a turnout as ever.

Three tents and a performance stage will house more than 200 exhibits on the town green, with performances, demonstrations and concerts scheduled.

"It's a very important event," said selectmen chairman Tom Callahan. "It's a sort of showcase of the town, .right in the heart of the community. It's in one of the most picturesque parts of town and shows off its beauty." Callahan, who said he will be in attendance this weekend, considers it, the biggest single event the town has. He added that the festival provides an opportunity for out-of-towners to see the town's shops and take advantage of the resources at the art center.

A juried art exhibition, featuring 77 works, a members art exhibition, a young artist exhibition and a juried exhibition of 85 fine art crafters — such as basket weaving, glass blowing and wood carving — will be on display over the weekend.

Festival co-coordinator Diane Kennedy said that the art center is making an effort to improve the quality of the crafts shown at the festival

"This year we have some jurors who are craft curators in Boston, who juried what will be shown on the common," she said. "It used to be a lot of country crafts and we're focusing on fine studio artists, whose livelihood is their art form."

"It's a sort of showcase of the town, .right in the heart of the community. It's in one of the most picturesque parts of town and shows off its beauty."

— Selectmen chairman Tom Callahan

This is Kennedy's first year involved in the festival, but she is no stranger to it. She visited the festival last year while a resident of Washington D.C. and became a member of South Shore Art Center when she moved into the area. She said she has been involved in the arts for the past 15 years, including an administrative position with the National Endowment for the Arts, and sees this festival as a "great opportunity to promote the arts."

There will be separate tents for the young artists exhibition, and children's events, including craft making and card making, for their fathers on Father's Day Weekend. Kennedy said 85, 8-ft. by 8-ft. tents will be on the performance stage, housing the fine art crafters.

On Friday night, the art center will host a reception from 6-8 p.m. for its Blue Ribbon members show. Each member of the center was able to put up one piece of art work, with four awards of excellence handed out. On Saturday, the third annual Cohasset Common Fiddlers' Gathering will take place, featuring an open invitation for all area traditional fiddlers to play. That night, a dance will be held in the Town Hall at 7 p.m. featuring live fiddle music and a caller.

Because of the large number of people expected to attend and the shortage of parking in Cohasset, people are encouraged to park at the South Shore Music Circus and take shuttle buses back and forth to the festival. Admission to the festival is free, with a suggested donation of $3 and admission to the dance is $7.

For more information and a complete schedule, see this week's South Look.

Last year's Festival on the Common drew thousands of area residents to town.

Town's lobster trade hangs on despite obstacles to be a really good profession to get into at the time."

Herzog, who owns the Miss Jayne, said there is always something to keep him busy, whether it's repairing pots or painting buoys. He said the lobstering business has been going "mostly downhill," but said there has been a turnaround in the past few years.

He attributed the downturn in part to the a near-fatal blow suffered in 1991 when the Massachusetts coast was battered by the famous "No-Name Storm."

"The stocks were just destroyed," he said. "I guess it was just a natural way of controlling things, but it was extremely tough." He thinks that immature lobsters were killed en masse during the storm, and also believes that it takes seven years for a lobster to reach legal size, noting the numbers add up to explain the slow recovery.

Adler said that though the storm might have had some impact, he doesn't attribute a depletion in the area's catch to that. He said lobstermen are reporting a good amount of baby lobsters, something that wouldn't be possible if the stock was depleted in the beginning of the decade. He also said that statewide, the total catch size was up last year and that Maine has had a number of successful years.

Herzog also said a stagnation in fleet size and boat size in Cohasset harbor has been hurting the industry. He said the boats are limited to two-foot jumps in size — a 40-foot boat could be replaced by a boat between 38 and 42 feet — or they would have to give up their mooring and be placed on the 20-year waiting list that currently exists for a mooring in the harbor. Herzog said not only is a lobsterman unable to buy a bigger boat, he can't buy a smaller one either.

With the lobster fleet getting older and lacking a younger generation to replace them, and a long waiting list for a mooring, Herzog doesn't see any hope of increasing the fleet size. "There are boats coming out of Boston, straight down the gut. You can't compete with them," he said. "they can expand, we have to wait 20 years."

The Cohasset fishing fleet has had a history of adaptation. Town archivist David Wadsworth said Cohasset has had a viable fishing industry since at least the early 1800s, when it was primarily a cod fleet. When the cod supply was nearly wiped out in the mid-19th century, the Cohasset fleet moved to mackerel, using two-masted schooners. Wadsworth said the focus turned to lobster in "at least the early 1900s."

According to Herzog, a study done by Bernard Salvadore a couple of decades ago reported the industry brought millions of dollars back to the town of Cohasset. He said the money came from direct lobster sales within the town, as well as indirectly by things like truck sales, marine supplies, fuel, bait and shipwrighting. Bertolami said those numbers have to have increased since the study was done, and added that the money didn't even include funds generated by tourism.

Adler said the prospects of long-term viability for the industry looks promising, despite recent efforts of environmentalists to curb over-fishing. He said lobstermen have always been conservation minded and put size restriction on lobsters long before such a limit was placed on fish. "They know that if they take everything, there won't be anything for tomorrow," he said, adding that regulation such as escapes on traps, bigger meshes on nets, and a prohibition on egg-bearing females have been abided by for a while, to keep ahead of any stock crash.

Lobsterman Mike Wilson and his son, John, row back to shore from the Time Machine.

The sale of the Mill River Railway to Peter Roy earlier this year resulted in concern that the Lobster Pound, which is located on the property and buys from up to 20 lobstermen in the harbor, might close. But pound owner Tommy Alioto recently reached an agreement that will let him stay on the property through at least the remainder of the season.

Herzog said that though the issue that most concerns him is the new sewer outfall pipe, which will be releasing treated fresh water into the small harbor. "Fresh water has been known to kill lobsters," said Herzog, who, like many of the harbor's lobstermen, keeps part of his catch in underwater storage containers known as lobster "cars." Local lobstermen fear that the influx of fresh water into the harbor will decease the salinization of the water, killing the lobsters stored there.

But sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil said in an interview in April that the water that comes into the harbor every day from the pipe is far less than the amount of fresh water brought in by from the Gulph watershed. State officials have said that lobstermen and all marine life was taken into consideration when the project was planned and said that there should not be an adverse affect on the lobsters.

But Herzog isn't convinced. "Any increase in fresh water is a loss of money for me."

Another accident at Beechwood intersection

Friday's accident scene is becoming all too familiar at the Beechwood/3A intersection, police said.

There's been another car accident at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A.

"This was the sixth accident there in the past couple of months," Safety Officer Rick Yocum said.

Police said at about 3:15 p.m. Friday, Louise H. Donovan, 76, of Beechwood Street was traveling northbound on 3A in a 1999 Mercury sedan. When she started to turn left onto Beechwood Street from 3A, she collided with a 1990 Nissan sedan driven by Wells W. McDonald, 48, of Scituate who was heading south on the state highway, Yocum said.

McDonald was transported to South Shore Hospital where he was treated and released. Both operators were wearing seatbelts, police said.

Both cars sustained heavy front-end damage, police said.

Yocum said Donovan will be cited for failure to yield to an oncoming car.

Yocum said he would like to see safety improvements at the intersection, such as a dedicated left-turn-only lane.

Water flow problem raises questions about responsiveness

Should DPW oversee departments?

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

An ongoing water problem on Highland Avenue threatens to re-open a can of worms, namely the idea of corralling the water and sewer departments into part of the public works department.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said Cohasset residents are having trouble understanding why they can't just call the town manager or selectmen and get a response, when in fact, the selectmen's office has no control or jurisdiction over the water and sewer commissions. She suggested at last Tuesday's selectmen's meeting that the board take another look at the idea of ending the water and sewer departments' autonomy.

But Selectmen Fred Koed, a water commissioner from 1994-97, said bringing the water and sewer departments under town control "sounds like an easy solution to a complex problem." Koed said the board would not be able to spend the time necessary to go into the departments' issues in enough depth to make proper decisions.

The issue arose after Highland Avenue resident Paula Buick sent a letter to selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad accusing the department of being unresponsive in dealing with supposed water flow problems in the Highland Avenue area.

In the letter, Buick chronicled her two-year battle with the water department over what she calls "the abysmal water situation" on the hill. According to Buick, who moved to Highland Avenue in the 1980s, her house and "at least six families from Nan Roth's house onward," have been plagued with low water pressure. Buick said the problem is so bad at her house, that no two faucets are able to open at the same time. She said she has had the piping from the main line in the street, and throughout the house, improved, but with no results.

In the summer of 1999, Buick said she spent $900 to have the connector from the main pipe to the house shutoff, and had temporary improvement to the situation, but still cites low water pressure, sometimes as low as a trickle in the early morning.

Buick said the water department had told her there were plans to replace the water main in the street, but said in a letter to commissioner Rob Kasameyer that she and her neighbors, "have no confirmation of this and the water department did not agree with that." She ended the letter saying, "I have no faith that a phone call from the water department staff results in anything happening."

She then said in her letter to selectmen and Haddad that "there is a distinct lack of responsibility or sense of accountability, which is stunning to me...There is no standard of practice, no management standards or policy relating to consumer inquiries, no standard communication."

But, according to water commission chairman John McNabb, the water department has "done all we could," and said that though there is a water problem on hill, recent tests showed that water flow to the area was "adequate." McNabb distinguished the difference between "low water pressure" and "low water flow." He said Buick's problem resulted from low water flow, not low water pressure.

McNabb said the town did replace the connector at her house, which was substandard and subsequent water tests showed an "adequate" water flow to her house. He also said on Aug. 6, 1999, the water department received a phone call from Buick saying "the flow was great." In a letter sent by project manager George Hawksley, to Buick on June 5, he stated the water department "believed the problem had been resolved." McNabb said the town has done all it could, tests had shown adequate water flow to the house, and suggested that if problems linger, it has to do with the plumbing in her house.

But in light of complaints that the problem was in fact not resolved, McNabb said he has asked Tutela Engineering, the town's consulting engineers on water distribution and sewer reconstruction, to look at the problem and establish a game plan for the general area.

"We're going to look at the entire area and try to maybe improve flow to the entire area," McNabb said. He also confirmed that improvements to the Highland Avenue area are being planned, but due to the amount of projects taking place around the town, work on the area is not imminent.

McNabb also squashed rumors that the low water flow to the hill would result in problems in supply to fire hydrants, if a fire was to break out. Buick had written in a letter in October, 1998 and again in May of this year that "The recent fire down on Atlantic Avenue realized our concerns - as we saw the problems with inadequate water pressure at different times." McNabb called these comments "irresponsible" and said the fire department did not report any problems with water flow or pressure during the fire.

Koed was asked to look into the problem on behalf of selectmen. He said that though he doesn't believe the town should have to oversee another department, he does think it is the role of the selectmen to work with the commission and devise a way to prevent these problems in the future.

Crafts set festival apart

South Shore Art Center kicks off 45th Festival on the Common Friday

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Where can you find great music, art, dancing, strawberries and incredible crafts in one place?

Go no farther than Cohasset Village where the Festival on the Common kicks off this weekend.

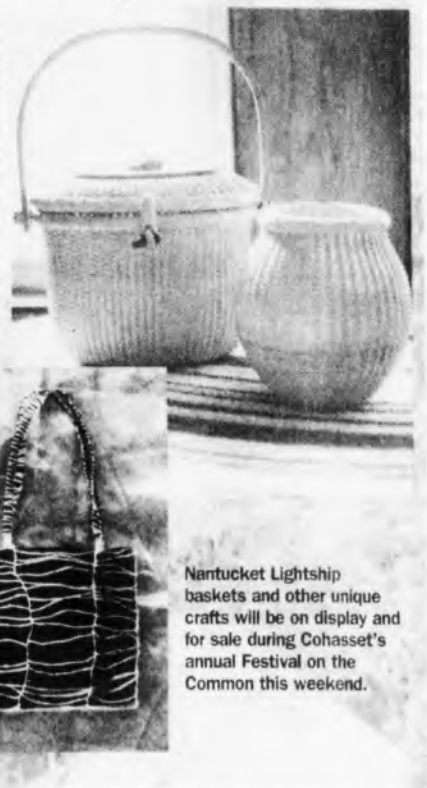
Friday marks the start of the 45th annual Festival on the Common sponsored by the South Shore Art Center, and according event coordinators, it will be a weekend to remember.

"There's always something here for all ages," said Monica McKenney, director of development for the SSAC and one of the festival's organizers. The festival serves as a fundraiser for the art center, supporting it's many varied programs and classes.

Festival events get underway at 2 p.m. Friday (June 16) and will run throughout the weekend. Admission to most of the festival programs is free.

Art exhibits, demonstrations and live music make up Friday's festival menu, said McKenney. The Children's Art Exhibition tent will be open and a family concert with the band Americana followed by a performance by Dawna Hammers are all on the schedule.

Exquisite crafts are a big festival draw, said McKenney who noted that while craft shows often charge steep admissions, craft lovers will be able to get their fill for free in Cohasset this weekend. McKenney said there will be 85 different "fine craft" merchants at the festival throughout the weekend.



Nantucket Lightship baskets and other unique crafts will be on display and for sale during Cohasset's annual Festival on the Common this weekend.

All of the festival craft merchants were specifically picked for their professionalism and the amazing quality of their work, said McKenney.

Fellow festival coordinator Diané Kennedy played a big part in overseeing the craft merchant selection process.

"We had about 200 entries from merchants," Kennedy said. "We picked 85 of them for the festival. These are fabulous top notch artists."

Kennedy said some of the crafts which will be available at the festival include different kinds of handmade jewelry, fused glass jewelry, hand woven baskets, pottery, quilts, wood sculptures, hand crafted paper products, clothing, and even table linens. She said some of the local merchants include Jon Clark, of Scituate, Kieli Storm Dooley, of Cohasset, Peter Barger, of Norwell, Marj Bates, of Scituate, and Patti Epstein of Marshfield.

Kennedy said if people are thinking of buying some of the crafts, they will all be available at different ranges of price ranging from $2 up to $1,000.

The 45th annual festival also features live musical entertainment, art exhibits and the strawberry festival.

"The festival started with these local artists who just wanted to display their work. This group of artists ended up hanging up clothesline between trees (on the common) and displayed what art work they had. I think even today, the festival still manages to capture that old fashioned New England country feel."

It's a family affair

Marshfield clan featured in James Library art show

Art is all in the family for the Borror's of Marshfield.

And this month, the works of Jack and Linda Borror, and their daughter Kirsten (Borror) Chappell are featured in an art exhibit at the James Library and Center for the Arts in Norwell.

All three members of the Borror family have their own unique artistic perspectives, and said they are excited to be able to share their works of art with the South Shore community. "The Borror Family Show" opened with a reception Friday and will run through June 30.

"The Borrors each have their own distinctive style and this retrospective offers something for everyone."

James Library art coordinator Nancy Colella

While they feature different art exhibits monthly, James Library art coordinator Nancy Colella said she is enthusiastic about being able to present this unique family show.

"We are very pleased to be hosting this wonderful show of works produced by such a talented family," Colella stated. "The Borrors each have their own distinctive style and this retrospective offers something for everyone."

Each member of the Borror family has been involved with art their whole lives.

The baffling charm of 'Miss Saigon'

By Alexander Stevens
CNC ARTS WRITER

Perhaps it's silly to point out what appear to be the fundamental flaws in "Miss Saigon." After all, even if the show is flawed, no one seems to care — the soap operatic love story has grossed more than $1 billion worldwide.

But this national touring production — yes, the one with the helicopter — makes its final landing in Boston, through June 25 at the Wang Theatre, in Boston. So it seems like a good time to ask why "Miss Saigon" has captured the public's imagination. Like "Cats," it's a phenomenon that seems to befuddle as many people as it charms.

Maybe I'm just too much of a romantic to enjoy this show. That may sound like a strange thing to say about a show that's pumped full of tragedy and love, but one of the ironies of "Miss Saigon" that it's viewed as a powerful romance, but on closer inspection, it's actually a pretty sad excuse for a love story.

It starts out with everything you'd want in a tragic love story. Chris (Will Swenson), a disillusioned American soldier stationed in Saigon during the Vietnam War, meets the virginal, 17-year-old Vietnamese girl, Kim (Mika Nishida), who's lost her family and, with no other options, is about to embark, awkwardly, on a life of prostitution.

But the American soldier will save her, sweeping her off her feet, before she's sullied by her first night on the job. There's a nice physicality between Swenson and Nishida. Not only is Nishida's beauty irresistible, she's also a little wisp of a girl who gets swallowed up in Swenson's powerful, protective arms.

But the sad fact of "Miss Saigon" is that Chris and Kim never really fall in love at all. Sometimes love is all about circumstances — in this case, two people frightened by the war find solace and safety in each other's embrace. No wonder they confuse it for love.

But if it really were love, Chris wouldn't be so easily deterred. Saigon is falling, he's headed out on the show's celebrated prop — the helicopter that lands at the American embassy — and despite his efforts to bring her, Kim gets left behind.

Three years later, he's living in America with a his wife Ellen (Christine Allocca), while Kim is still left behind, pining for Chris, convinced that he'll fulfill his promise, and rescue her and their little son (although Chris doesn't know his son exists). In short, Kim made the same mistake the rest of us did: she believed Chris really loved her. And why not? They sang love songs to each other for most of the first act.

Fans who believe this is a love story will want to scour the second act for a good explanation for why Chris never came back to retrieve his beloved. Hard to find one. Ellen explains to Kim, when the two meet in the second act, that he wanted to find her "but what could he do?" Not exactly the gritty determination with which most romantic heroes pursue their long lost loves.

The whole things is made more frustrating by the fact that we're still rooting for Chris to choose Kim. After all, his relationship with Kim is far more compelling and chemical than his droopy marriage with Ellen. C'mon, Chris, kiss Kim again, hug the son you never knew about, sing them a song, and bring'em back to the states. Then it's happily ever after, wild applause, end of story.

No such luck.

The whole thing is one big, frothy soap opera, as overwrought as anything you'll see on weekday afternoons on TV. And, like most afternoon soaps, "Miss Saigon" never penetrates to true feelings — we sit in our seats, follow the stories, but never really get swallowed up in the emotion.

The bigger disappointment, for me, has always been the score. The team of Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg proved their ability to write a varied, entertaining pop musical with "Les Miserables," a score that rewardingly, jumps from dirges, to ballads, to rousing anthems. So it's surprising how one-note "Miss Saigon" always seems, drifting from one song to next, one hardly distinguishable from the other.

But who cares? Apparently not the 25 million people who have flocked to "Miss Saigon." This production is just as slick and sturdy as you'd expect from the national tour — and Joseph Anthony Foronda is back with his crowd-pleasing performance as the Engineer — so fans of the show surely won't be disappointed with this incarnation. And the rest of us are left to just scratch our heads and wonder.

"Miss Saigon" plays through June 25 at the Wang Theatre, Boston. Tickets are $15-$65. Call 1-800-447-7400.

Big Momma's House (C)

We are in for prosthetically enhanced, oversized creatures, starting most recently as Mike Myers' gargantuan monster in "Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me" and coming at us soon in Eddie Murphy's sequel to "The Nutty Professor." Here, as Malcolm, an FBI agent, Martin Lawrence, a comedian most comfortable being vulgar, as in his limited-release concert film, is given a change to enlarge ... on his TV series roles, this time as the title character, an imposing, Olympic-sized southern woman given to hearty kicks in the groin when pressed. The reason Malcolm is all gussied up as Big Momma is that a bad guy (Terrence Howard) has broken out of prison and is coming for his former girlfriend, Sherry (Nia Long), who calls to ask Big Momma, with whom she's been out of touch, if she may come to visit. But the real Big Momma (Ella Mitchell) has been called out of town, so Malcolm, speedily as a quick brown fox, gets into Big Momma drag and welcomes the long-absent young woman and her small son to her comfortable abode.

Malcolm's partner (Paul Giamatti), who surveys all this from across the street and from hidden cameras that Malcolm has placed in the real Big Momma's house, sometimes comes in handy when part of Malcolm's make-up or outfits begins to unravel, or unfurl, or whatever a prosthetic fat face does when it comes undone. The movie moves along jerkily, with little set pieces substituting for a coherent plot, some of them working, some not. One that works on a pure gut level is a birthing scene when Malcolm, in full Big Momma drag, is thought to be a midwife and is brought to the blessed event by a passel of especially unattractive women. The deed done, Malcolm feels justly proud. Audiences will feel justifiably winded. Another scene that works is when Malcolm, as Malcolm but not revealing that he's an FBI agent, woos Sherry and pals it up with her son (Jascha Washington). Lawrence is sweet as Malcolm, alternately fierce and smother-loving as Momma, and sometimes, as when Sherry crawls in bed with him, thinking he's Momma, he's in a dither.

Two church scenes — the minister is played by a performer known as Cedric "The Entertainer" — provide both Malcolm as Momma and the real Momma a chance to whip up rollicking versions of "Oh Happy Day," a great relief from the otherwise unbearably ugly "music" that accompanies the action. Like Eddie Murphy in his "Nutty Professor" role, Lawrence as Big Momma is amply subsumed in his make-up, but unlike Murphy, who truly inhabits his fat folk, Lawrence just seems to be visiting, however wrapped up he is for the moment. Still, a comedian of his range and knowingness can't help but offer some rousing minutes, and while the romantic mushy stuff is conventional, the scenes that have Momma in high dudgeon are frequently stirring. This is a crowd-pleasing film for people who find flatulence jokes funny, a large segment of the contemporary moviegoing audience.

Jack, who is retired now, used to work at an advertising firm in Westwood, and was involved in the field for 35 years. Over the years, Jack produced many innovative sketches and drawings several of which found their way into the James Library exhibit.

Jack has bachelor's degree in art from the Columbus College of Art in Ohio.

"It was a real treat to work with my parents in a way we don't normally work together. Through the show, I'm learning that we're all very independent people."

Marshfield artist Kirsten Borror Chappell

In addition to the work he did professionally, Jack has also done a number of non-work related drawings and is skilled in several art mediums including watercolors and other forms of painting. Travel serves as the inspiration for much of his work, said Jack, who along with Linda has visited Europe, Bali, Mexico, Canada, and much of the U.S.

While he hasn't produced much new work of late, Jack said the show has rekindled his passion for art.

"I'm getting back into painting," he said. "I don't have a lot of the paintings I did over the years because I sold a lot of them, but I've been picking up the brush again. I'm ready to launch back into that. This show gave me the opportunity to revisit that possibility."

Jack enjoys having his work presented alongside the work of his family.

"I think it's great to be able to do this with my family. We all get along great, and we all offer different aspects of art. It's also great to be able to display our work at the James Library, which I think is a fantastic gallery."

Kirsten echoes the sentiment.

"It was a real treat to work with my parents in a way we don't normally work together," she said. "Through the show, I'm learning that we're all very independent people."

Kirsten, who currently lives in Marshfield with her husband George, received a BA from the University of Massachusetts and a BFA from Cornell University. She works on watercolors, oils, and acrylics, and she said her recent works have a lot of symbolism contained within them. Kirsten also enjoys painting furniture and doing other kinds of decorative work.

"The opening the other night was fantastic," she said. "A lot of people showed up, which was great. It seemed a lot of the people who were there really appreciated the fact that we were showing our work together as a family."

Kirsten said she and her parents have a great deal to offer the art world. She said her father's work has a "very strong quality" to it, as well as an element of "silliness" and a great sense of humor.

Of her mother's work, Kirsten said "Her work has a very dreamy quality to it. It's dreamy in the sense that it has a sweeping quality."

Linda received her art training at the Ohio State University and at the Columbus College of Art and Design. She worked professionally in the fields of graphic arts, advertising design, and photo styling. Linda is a board member at the North River Arts Society, of which she has been a member for 29 years. Like her husband, Linda said her travels have influenced her works of art.

"Most of my work has been onsite work," she said. "I find different sights, and I paint them. I work in all mediums, like oils, pastels, and watercolors. I just enjoy doing art for the sheer pleasure of it. There are so many beautiful places around New England that inspire my paintings. I do like to experiment with different mediums, and I hope other people will be able to enjoy the work as much as I do."

Linda said she hopes the public will be able to take the time and examine the differences in the works of art between the three family members.

"That really makes it interesting," Linda said. "And we're all excited to be able to share these works with all of our friends in the community."

Cookie Crust Cobbler

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Ripe summer fruit can be can baked with any number of toppings, including biscuit dough, pie pastry, a simple streusel, and even cookie dough. A streusel topping is characteristic of a crisp but the others are variations on the cobbler. The problem with cobblers is that the fruit is usually oversweetened and many unwelcome spices are added — the worst offender being cinnamon — that mask the lively flavor of the summer fruit. The other problem is that the topping is often either overwhelming (in the case of a biscuit-style cobbler) or soggy and lifeless, as is the case with many crisps. I was looking for a sweet but crisp topping that could be paired with only slightly sweetened baked fruit, the sort of fruit dessert that highlights the fruit, not the pastry.

The first issue was the topping. I started with a basic sugar cookie dough and then placed it on the fruit before baking. It was overcooked by the time the fruit was ready. I then decided to partially bake the fruit, refrigerate the dough, and then place the cold dough on top of the fruit for the final 20 minutes or so of baking. This worked much better. But for a really crisp topping, I found that it was best to bake the cookie crust separately and then place it on top of the baked fruit just before serving. This produced a spectacular dessert with a truly crisp top crust.

The next issue was the fruit itself. First, the fruit has to be ripe. You can make a decent cobbler from second-rate fruit, but never a great one. I have also tested a variety of optional ingredients, including spices and vanilla, and found that simple fruit and sugar, with just a touch of lemon juice and rind, work best although I am also fond of a bit of chopped crystallized ginger as an option. After much testing, I settled on a mere 1/2 cup of sugar for 10 cups of fruit; the topping is plenty sweet with 1/3 cup of sugar. I like the play between only modestly sweetened fruit and a crispy, sweet crust. (This moderate use of sugar invites the addition of vanilla ice cream upon serving.) Thickening is another matter. Since I bake the fruit uncovered for a half-hour, much of the excess liquid evaporates and the fruit is therefore never watery. I like a juicy cobbler, and since one does not have to cut slices as is necessary with a pie, a thickener is not required.

COOKIE CRUST COBBLER

I strongly suggest baking the crust separately and then placing it on top of the fruit just before serving. This produces a truly crisp topping that pairs well with the soft fruit. I find it best to make this recipe with 10 cups of fruit and only 1/2 cup sugar for a fresh, lively dessert instead of a dull, oversweetened one.

For the cookie dough topping:
1 3/4 cups flour
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon baking powder
1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
10 tablespoons unsalted butter at 65 degrees (firm, not soft)
1/3 cup sugar plus additional sugar for sprinkling
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla

For the fruit mixture:
10 cups summer fruit (peaches, plums, berries, etc.)
Juice of half a lemon
1 teaspoon lemon rind, minced (optional)
1 tablespoon minced crystallized ginger (optional)
1/3 cup sugar, approximately

Heavy cream or vanilla ice cream for serving

1. For the topping, whisk together the flour, salt, baking powder, and nutmeg in a medium bowl. In a large bowl, using an electric mixer, cream the butter and sugar for two minutes at medium speed. Scrape down the sides of the bowl. Add the egg and vanilla and beat until combined, about 30 seconds. Add the dry ingredients and beat until combined, about 30 seconds more, or until the dough just starts to come together. Press the dough together with your hands to form a ball, and then wrap in plastic and refrigerate until firm, about 2 hours.

2. Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Prepare fruit (wash, peel, hull, core, etc.), and cut into bite-sized pieces, if necessary. Make sure fruit is well-drained. Toss fruit with lemon juice, optional rind, optional ginger, and sugar. Pour fruit into a 9 x 13-inch quart baking dish.

3. Place dish with fruit mixture in oven.

4 Bake for 30 minutes, tossing fruit two or three times as it bakes to mix evenly with juices. Meanwhile, roll out dough on a piece of waxed or parchment paper to the dimensions of the baking dish. (The dough should be slightly smaller to fit easily into the dish.) Place dough back in the refrigerator until fruit has baked 30 minutes. Remove baking dish from oven, flip the dough onto fruit from the paper, and return dish to oven. Bake for another 20 minutes or until the dough has puffed, become firm, and turned light brown. Note that the juices may bubble up over part of the dough as it bakes. Allow to cool for at least 30 minutes before serving with heavy cream or vanilla ice cream. Serves 8 to 10.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

TUESDAY, JUNE 13

Influences today hold high potential for productivity. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. You can begin new activities, sign contracts before 11:40 a.m., when the moon forms a harmonious alignment to Mercury. This is a day for problem-solving; zero in on issues or projects that have been troublesome. You can get to the heart of a matter and work out the glitches. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 7:55 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the evening. Keep it light.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14

Start this day with a positive, lighthearted attitude. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 7:31 a.m., when it opposes Jupiter. Plan to finish projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. At 2:18 p.m. the final windup to this month's full moon begins, when the moon enters Sagittarius. At this time the green light goes on for starting new projects or making long-range plans. Kick back and enjoy the good things in life this evening.

THURSDAY, JUNE 15

A full moon buildup makes for a high-energy day. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. You can be extremely productive. There is one rough spot in effect between 10:31 a.m.-1:31 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. Others may be hypersensitive and can overreact to situations. Keep a cool head. You may encounter unexpected obstacles or delays. Go with the flow. You can let off steam this evening by pursuing favorite sports or exercise routines.

FRIDAY, JUNE 1 6

The action planet Mars enters the sign Cancer at 8:30 a.m., remaining there until July 31. The big news, however, is the full moon. This month's full moon culminates at 6:27 p.m., 26-degrees of Sagittarius. Take it slow and easy. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Channel high energy constructively. A lunar opposition to Venus can make for an exciting social evening. Forget your troubles and let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, JUNE 17

The moon enters pragmatic Capricorn at 2:26 a.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, plan to get them out of the way this weekend. You can be extremely productive. Influences offer a last chance opportunity for starting new projects and making important decisions before Mercury retrograde begins to take effect. Launching important ventures, making long-range commitments or signing contracts will be off limits for the remainder of the month.

SUNDAY, JUNE 18

A Capricorn moon all day prompts you to focus on duties and responsibilities you have taken on. Now is the time to fulfill your promises. Venus enters the sign Cancer at 6:15 p.m., remaining there until July 13. Planets moving into the sign Cancer bring a focus on home, family and domestic responsibilities. The most favorable period for new starts today begins at 6:15 p.m.

MONDAY, JUNE 19

A Mercury retrograde period will begin to take effect this week. If you must initiate new ventures, get them off the ground before 10:46 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Jupiter and becomes inactive. New starts in your professional, external life are off limits until July 17. On the other hand, influences become most favorable for making gains on an inner, spiritual level. Plan to take more time out for yourself in this period. Today the Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 10:46 a.m. until 3:26 p.m., when it enters Aquarius.

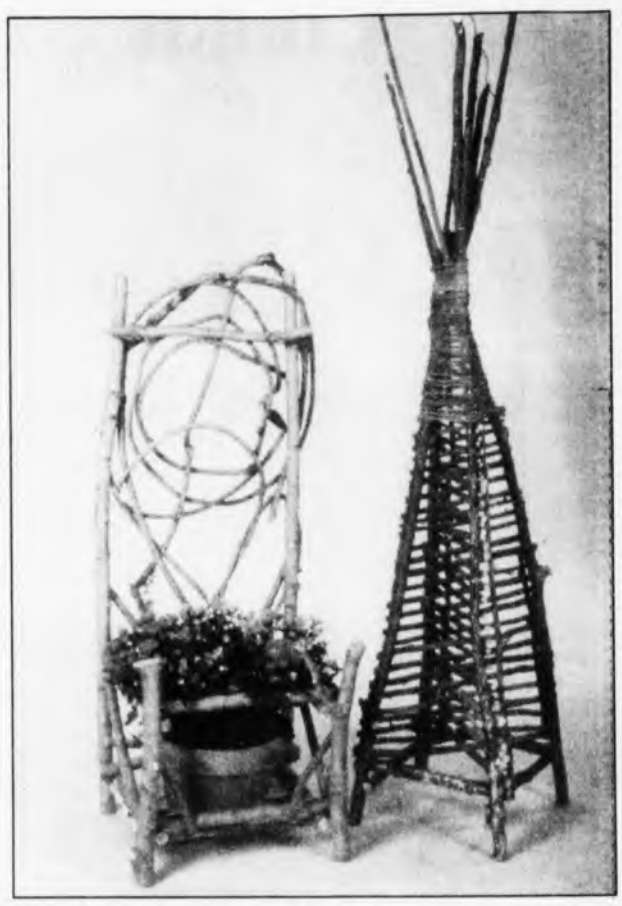
Crafts set Cohasset festival apart

Dave and Eda Bentinnen handcraft pipe sculptures like this one "Irises with Frog."

Storm Dooley will bring her beautiful sea glass jewelry to the festival.

Crafts by Harry Spring Pottery will also be on display and for sale at the festival.



Janice Shields is one of the 85 top crafters selected to bring her work to Cohasset's annual Festival on the Common.

dren's activity tent will both continue throughout the festival, McKenny noted.

The fiddlers concert and gospel music performance at the First Parish Church will liven up Saturday's events which also include a community sculpture and photo activity, and "Contra" dancing — similar to square dancing — for both children and adults. There is a charge for the dancing — $7 for adults, $3 for children. The festival opens at 10 a.m., Saturday.

Festival events begin at noon on Sunday and more concerts are scheduled with performances by various brass bands.

While sponsored by the SSAC, McKenney said the festival couldn't happen without the work of more than 100 local volunteers. Local company's help sponsor the event. This year's sponsors include Atlantica Restaurant, Fleet Bank, and the Hingham Institute for Savings.

The festival has grown in leaps and bounds over the last half century, noted McKenney. SSAC's first director Tom Lucas (who passed away just last year) and a bunch of ambitious artists started what has become one of the largest, most successful art festivals in the area.

"The festival started with these local artists who just wanted to display their work," McKenney said. "This group of artists ended up hanging up clothesline between trees (on the common) and displayed what art work they had. I think even today, the festival still manages to capture that old fashioned New England country feel."

The seaside beauty of Cohasset makes it the perfect summertime location for a festival, McKenney said.

"The views of the ocean make it great, but what also makes it great is that it's just an old fashioned summertime festival," she said.

"This always has been and always will be a wonderful event," McKenney said. "People don't seem to just come for one day. They come for the whole weekend. It's a real kick-off to the summer season."

For more information on the festival on the common call the South Shore Art Center at (781) 383-2787.

The Plymouth County Board of REALTORS, Inc. (PCBR) held their 22nd Annual Networking Reception at the Pembroke Country Club Thursday, June 1. During the reception, PCBR president Donna Wood, CRS, CRI, partner with the Macdonald & Wood Real Estate Group in Duxbury, announced the recipients of the 2000 REALTOR of the Year, the 2000 REALTOR Outstanding Service Award, the 2000 Affiliate Member Service Award and the first annual Dennis M. The REALTOR of the Year award is the highest honor bestowed upon a REALTOR. This year's recipient is Betsy Currier. Over the years, Beth has been actively involved in many aspects of the board. Her company has supported many membership meetings and she personally has been an active member of the Board's Education Committee, Community Service Committee and currently sits as a planning member of the Benefits, Education and Technology 2000 (BET 2000) conference committee.

The Realtor Outstanding Service Award recognizes an individual who has worked tirelessly, often behind the scenes, in helping the board achieve its goals. This year's recipient, Ginny Harvey, has been actively involved with the board since 1982. Most recently she served as the co-chair of the 1999 Education Fair Committee, and now serves as the co-chair of BET2000. Harvey holds the following professional designations: GRI, CRS and CBR. She is an agent with Coastal Countryside Properties, LLC in Cohasset.

The Dennis M. Monahan Memorial Award is a new award that serves to honor the memory of the board's late executive officer, Dennis Monahan. This award was presented to Jeffrey D. Chute, GRI of Chute and Payzant located in Plymouth. Chute was recognized for his efforts in helping the board with their member orientation program and educational offerings.

Several local sales agents recently received Jack Conway & Co.'s Conway Degree of Excellence (CDE) designation, an honor they obtained after a year of intensive coursework in real estate sales and marketing.

The CDE designation represents the completion of 25 hours of advanced training in sales techniques, customer service, technology and financing issues. At a recent graduation ceremony, Massasoit Community College president Dr. Robert Rose awarded diplomas to more than 60 Conway agents and managers.

"Education is so important for real estate agents, especially as our industry changes so quickly," said company Chairman Jack Conway. "By completing the CDE courses, these professionals have shown their commitment to providing top-quality service."

Those honored with the CDE degree include the following agents in local Conway offices:

Elaine Bongarzone and Liz Charlton of Scituate; Debbie Reilley of Hingham; Frank Ditto and Peggy Francis of Cohasset; Marian Blackwell of Duxbury; Lorraine Barnicoat and Sue Johnson of Hanover; Barbara Smith of Norwell; Dottie Burum, Kevin Jacobsen, Jon Ocksrider, Joan Williams of Pembroke; Susan Conway of the Property Management Division and Beverly Gordon of the Relocation Division.

The Elijah Cushing House "Cushing Corners"

Today in the bright moonlight, you can almost imagine Hanson in 1724 when Elijah Cushing built his imposing colonial mansion at "Cushing Corners" on the old highway that made its way through a virgin forest laden with huge oaks and beech trees.

Created with wood harvested from this land — great oaks for the timbers, virgin pine for the beautiful paneling — and locally baked brick flanking both ends, this captivating historic property sits as true today as it did 276 years ago. It bears the rare distinction of having been part of four different towns due to the changing parish and town lines of centuries past. When first erected it was in Abington, in 1727 Hanover, in 1754 the West Parish of Pembroke, remaining as such until the town of Hanson was incorporated in 1820.

Elijah Cushing's house is a true historical American treasure. Facing the road and guarded by tall trees, the country estate stands simple and serene in tribute to its long and dignified history. In the early 1900s, it was meticulously restored by Mrs. Frank Cummings of Whitman and featured in the June 1919 issue of House Beautiful magazine. Though rooms have been sensitively added to the rear of the house, the historic portion stands unblemished and awaits the careful touch of an antique connoisseur in this millenium.

Built to the finest technical specifications of the time, the home was constructed using an ingenious insulation method that to this day keeps the occupants warm in winter and cool in summer. The center or keeping room runs the width of the house with two sets of pegged beams and a three-foot air space with a lower ceiling to keep the room temperate year-round. A small niche is built into the massive fireplace (one of eight working fireplaces) to keep the tinderbox warm.

The fireplace and chimney in the original kitchen (now used as an entertainment room) are tributes to a master builder, filling all but a small space on one end of this great low room. On one side is a huge copper cauldron set into the bricks and at the other end is an oven large enough to hold all the makings of the Thanksgiving dinner of 1853 that Charles Cushing writes about in his diary when he was nine years old.

"Today is Thanksgiving," he muses. "Had the goose, a plum pudding and a mince pie for dinner and I ate so much that my belly was as hard as a stone."

At the front of the house, granite steps lead to a magnificent Grand Foyer featuring the original doors and hardware flanked by two sitting rooms: one known as the "Benjamin Lincoln Room" and the other as the "Great West Room." A winding staircase leads to the second floor sleeping quarters.

A magnificently paneled master bedroom featuring details from the period of William and Mary with tombstone molding, pilasters, arched doors and a handsome fireplace is the highlight of the sleeping quarters. There are four additional bedrooms. A third floor, used for storage in modern times, once provided additional sleeping arrangements.

Back on the first floor, modern amenities include a delightful kitchen and dining area and four full baths. Other highlights include a glassed in porch, home office and legal five room apartment. Nearly two acres (possible buildable parcel) of pleasantly landscaped grounds complete this enchanting country estate.

The Elijah Cushing House has been the center of family and social lives for nearly three centuries. At the turn of the 21st century it awaits a homeowner who will savor its history and create memories that will linger into the future.

Designing a perennial border-soil preparation

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

The sweet perfume of Carolina allspice (Calycanthus floridus) permeates the garden on a steamy afternoon in early June. Planted adjacent to my small, peaceful water garden, this unique North American shrub greets garden visitors as they pass through the gate which leads into my backyard gardens. Occasionally referred to as the strawberry shrub, its curious, rusty-red blooms, which resemble miniature waterlilies, appear in profusion for several weeks and then, sporadically throughout the summer months. While the fruity scent is barely detectable early in the day, by mid-afternoon the aroma intensifies as a gentle breeze carries the delightful fragrance throughout the garden.

Taking a moment to savor these peculiar, aromatic blossoms, I pause to feed the goldfish and reflect on this year's growing season. As a seasoned gardener, I have learned to expect and accept certain inevitabilities from year to year. Just a few of my gardener's Murphy's Laws include: the sudden appearance of "Chuck" in the veggie garden the day before I planned to pick those perfectly-formed heads of broccoli; 50-mile an hour winds which arrive abruptly with the blooming of the tall bearded iris or the eight-foot tall lilies bearing 15 glorious flowers per stem; and the torrential downpours which annually coincide with the blooming of the magnificent blossoms of the herbaceous peonies and the Oriental poppies. Mother Nature delivered her anticipated June monsoon which sent several unsupported clumps of these beauties sprawling.

Another inevitability is the need to renovate foundation plantings and perennial borders which have become overgrown through the years, often prompted by the approach of a special event such as a graduation, wedding or garden tour. Severe pruning or complete removal of a few selected, unattractive specimens and applications of compost and fertilizer may serve as temporary solutions but eventually, more drastic action must be taken. The soil eventually becomes compacted and depleted even in perennial borders which were ideally prepared at their inception, often necessitating the removal of nearly every plant in order to replenish the soil and ensure their continued vigor.

Whether preparing a new planting bed or renovating an existing border, proper soil preparation is the most important factor in the ultimate success of your garden with the key word being drainage. Perhaps the single most common cause of perennial plant loss is poor drainage, especially during the winter months.

New England soils are typ-

Perennial border soil preparation

ically less than ideal for growing a wide range of perennials. Depending on your locale, soils tend to be one of three types: solid rock, heavy clay, or sandy. Many properties may contain all three characteristics in close proximity to one another. Ledge or very rocky soils may necessitate raised beds or container gardens. The latter two soil types will both benefit from the addition of organic matter which is available in many forms including peat moss, compost, well-decomposed manure or shredded leaves. Organic matter or humus improves water and nutrient retention in sandy soils and helps to break up and improve drainage in heavy, clay soils. Heavy soils may also benefit from the addition of gypsum and sand.

The importance of the addition of organic matter to the soil cannot be overemphasized as well as the need to replenish humus through the years. While it may seem to be a contradiction, a wide spectrum of plants prefer moisture-retentive but well-drained soils. Heavy soils are dense due to tiny clay particles which cling together and prevent air from reaching plant roots leading to rot, especially during the winter months when plants are not actively growing and thereby unable to diffuse excess moisture through their leaves. Dry, sandy soils tend to contain large particles which drain quickly demanding constant irrigation. In this era of frequent, widespread water bans, perennials, trees and shrubs are subjected to considerable stress during periods of drought which weakens them and often leads to their demise during the harsh winter months. In addition, nutrients are quickly swept away each time plants are watered. Amending the soil with organic materials alleviates many of these potential threats to the plants and is well worth the time and effort it takes to incorporate them into your soils.

As many perennials prefer soils which are just slightly acidic, the testing of your soil's pH is another important aspect of your garden's success. Organic amendments tend to acidify our soils and the addition of lime is generally recommended to raise the pH of the soil which will enable plants to use the available nutrients. A simple soil test kit can be purchased or a complete analysis can be performed by sending a sample to the UMass Extension Service in Amherst.

Finally, the selection of plants which are well-suited to your given soil type and light availability, the so-called "right plant, right place" approach to gardening, is a critical factor in your enjoying a healthy, attractive and successful perennial border.

"Contracts of carriage"

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I recently bought a ticket on Continental Airlines requiring a change of planes in Newark, N.J. Upon reaching Newark, my connecting flight was canceled. Continental said it was due to bad weather, although it was just raining in Newark, and other flights were taking off, and the weather at my final destination was fine.

They told me I'd have to spend the night in Newark at my own expense and the cancellation meant that I'd have fewer than 24 hours at my destination, so I asked to be put on the next flight home. I asked for a refund of my ticket, but they said it was nonrefundable.

I've put the charge for the ticket "in dispute" with my credit card company. Is there anything more I can do?

A. Many airlines, including US Airways for one, state in their "contract of carriage" (by FAA regulation, airlines are required to provide you with a copy on request) that in such a circumstance you're entitled to a full refund, even on a nonrefundable ticket.

Even if your originating flight is simply going to be late departing, you can opt for a refund or you can use your ticket at a future date on the same itinerary. And it doesn't matter why the flight was canceled or delayed — strike, weather or mechanical.

According to airline rules expert Terry Trippler, who writes for Web site onetravel.com, Continental used to adhere to this little-known industry practice (it's part of something called "Rule 240" in the contract), but it has changed its rules and no longer provides refunds for what the airline industry aptly calls "trips in vain."

It seems outrageous to me that they'd charge you for something they were unable to deliver. Imagine buying something from a store and being told that it was out of stock but you'll have to pay for it anyway! Come on!

If I were you, I'd take them to small claims court if you can't solve it any other way. Chances are they won't show up, and you'll win by default. If Continental's legal counsel does appear in court, I'd love to be there to see what they have to say for themselves.

And, next time, fly an airline like US Airways that treats its customers with more respect.

Q. I bought a ticket with Priceline.com and, on the return, the America West flight was delayed. I asked the agent what would have happened if the flight had been canceled. She told me that I wouldn't have been able to use my ticket on another airline to get to my destination, which is the usual practice under such a circumstance. Is this correct?

A. According to a spokesperson for Priceline.com, you were misinformed. Priceline "protects" customers on other airlines in the event of a cancellation or significant delay, just as would happen with most normal airline tickets.

It's important to note, by the way, that if you buy a consolidator ticket or certain other heavily discounted tickets, you may not be protected on another airline if there's a flight irregularity, so it's important to ask when you buy.

And, speaking of Priceline, another reader wrote to remind me that one disadvantage of Priceline tickets is that you don't get frequent-flyer miles.

Q. Our family of four would like to visit London this summer. We saw a package on British Airways (they call it the "Taste of London" package) for $849 per person, including airfare from the East Coast, three nights at the Tavistock Hotel, airport transfers and a bus tour of London.

How can we tell if this is a good deal? Are we better off arranging such a trip on our own?

A. It's sometimes hard to tell if a package deal is better than arranging a trip by yourself. One way is to call a travel agent or look on various Web sites to see what the lowest airfare is, then research rates at the hotel included in your package, and do the math.

With the advent of travel auction sites and last-minute Internet fares, you can often find airfare for less than what's offered by a package deal whose price was set, in many cases, the previous year.

George Hobica

In this instance, you'd be better off skipping the package and buying a "group" fare on British Airways (www.britishairways.com). They have a deal this summer where four people can fly from the East Coast to London for $1,949 RT, or $487 per person, with the only catch that passengers must buy $100 worth of car rentals, hotels or sightseeing options from BA Holidays, a stipulation that could easily be fulfilled, for example, by buying two nights at the Tavistock.

So, a group or family of four would do much better going this route: $487 plus, say, three nights at $65 per person, per night for a total of $682 vs. $849 for the package.

By the way, the Tavistock's (www.imperialhotels.co.uk) normal summer rates are the same (about $65 per person, per night double occupancy, including tax and breakfast) as what BA charges.

Selectmen react to MBTA's mitigation stance

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen are outraged about the MBTA pulling its mitigation offers from the table and are looking at a variety of get-tough options in response. Those options may include letters to state Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan and Governor Paul Cellucci, teaming up with Scituate in negotiations, and even the possibility of a lawsuit.

During their meeting Tuesday, selectmen chairman Tom Callahan suggested Cohasset take off the gloves when it comes to dealing with the MBTA. "We have been taking the high road and where has it gotten us?" he asked.

Selectman Michael Sullivan echoed Callahan's comments.

"How are we supposed to negotiate in good faith when this is how they are treating us?" Sullivan asked.

The board agreed to send a letter to Secretary Sullivan, expressing its displeasure with the negotiations and asking for an official explanation.

Towns may buy Arrowood site

But developer says subdivision is going ahead

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Scituate, Cohasset and state officials may be interested in purchasing the 70-acre Arrowood property off Clapp Road in Scituate's West End after all.

The Cohasset Water Commission that tried to get Scituate interested in a joint acquisition for the property a year or so ago sees the purchase as a way to protect that town's Aaron River Reservoir from a potential threat from septic systems in the proposed 17-home subdivision.

And now that restoration of the Greenbush line — which will abut Scituate's water supply, Tack Factory Pond — looks like a reality, Scituate officials want assurances that their town can connect to Cohasset water if needed, should a train mishap occur.

But if they decide to go ahead, officials will have to act quickly.

Steve Bjorkland, who estimates the value of the land at $5-6 million, said he and his partner Mark Winchester are moving forward.

"We're in the process of obtaining building permits," Bjorkland said. "The subdivision infrastructure is done, the roads are built and all the leaching fields are installed." He

Annual festival suits all tastes

By Bill Hutton
CORRESPONDENT

In what has become a summer tradition equal to that of a Red Sox roller-coaster ride, the South Shore Art Center held its 45th annual Festival on the Common in Cohasset this past weekend. The event thrilled young and old alike, boasting a wide variety of art exhibitions, fine handmade crafts, various musical entertainers and a children's art activity tent.

The event, which is believed by many Cohasset residents to signal the true start of summer, was well attended, despite daily challenges from Mother Nature, according to Dillon Bustin, executive director of the South Shore Art Center. "We won't have the exact figures until month's end, but we estimate that about 6,000 people attended this year's festival, with approximately $20,000 being raised to benefit the art center."

There were 93 booths set up for this year's festival, representing 14 different types of crafts, including fine art, textiles, jewelry and wooden exhibits.

Susan Arnold, who has operated the "ad libs clothing" booth at the festival for the past eight years, makes her living traveling to at least 24 shows like this every year, setting up her tent and pitching her wares all over the eastern part of the country. Says Arnold, "it's a lot of work, packing up and moving from show to show, but it's worth it. I haven't worked for anyone but myself since 1982. I have a lot of loyal customers who come to see me here every year. It's been a wonderful

Cohasset girl to star in new TV series

Kate Bosworth is starring in a TV series that premiers in July.

Will also appear in Disney film

By Peter Herman
CORRESPONDENT

This is quite a year for Cohasset's Kate Bosworth. The 17-year-old actress is making her debut on the small screen in the new Warner Brothers series "Young Americans", which premieres July 12. On the big screen she will appear in the Disney film "Remember the Titans," which is scheduled for a late September release.

In "Young Americans" Bosworth plays "Bella Banks", a local girl who has been raised by an overprotective father, and works at a gas station down the street from Rawley, a prestigious all-boys prep school. Part of the plot revolves around two boys from opposite sides of the tracks who both fall in love with Bella.

Bosworth spoke about her character. "Bella is incredibly independent, and very, very strong willed, determined, and witty. With boys she is guarded," she said.

Despite being this, Bosworth revealed that Bella gets her heart broken, but refused to give any details.

Bella is a character that Bosworth is enjoying playing. "It's cool playing such a strong, self-sufficient girl, I really like it. It's the most demanding role I've ever done. My character has so many moments. It's emotionally draining. I'm really drawing a lot out of myself as an actress. In one scene I'm not crying, but I'm heart broken. It's a nice surprise to learn that as an actress I can reach different depths.

"There are lots of issues that Bella deals with; being a 'townie,' the rich prep school nearby, forbidden love, new relationships, and her mother not being there. It's hard work and yet the cast makes it a lot of fun. We're really enjoying being with each other," she said.

"It's so small, it's nice, everyone kind of knows each other. It's kind of like one big family."

— CHS senior Kate Bosworth on living in Cohasset

Comparing herself to Bella, Bosworth sees both similarities and differences. "I'm loyal to myself and she is too. I think I'm less guarded. She's probably a little more self-sufficient than I am. I have two great parents (Hal and Patti), she never had a mother figure.

"I've never had to work on a car," she said with a laugh. "Knowing the different things to do is challenging. You can't fake it. It's not easy saying your working on one part of the engine when your hand's on another. I

School bus service no longer in-house

Outside contractor to take over

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The school department has turned over the reins of the school bus system to an outside contractor.

The move was in response to concerns about school transportation from school officials, especially relating to trips to athletic events and other extracurricular activities.

Though the school's transportation budget is $176,246, including salaries, leases, fuel, maintenance and benefits, the school committee voted last week to award the contract to Joseph Ingle Bus Service, Inc. of Hanover, which bid $206,818.

The remaining $30,572 will be made up by transferring money from other accounts.

The move was in response to concerns about school transportation from school officials, especially relating to trips to athletic events and other extracurricular activities.

The current bus system, which is town-run, was described as a "mess" by middle/high school Principal Curt Collins at an April school committee meeting. At the time, Collins said the schools were relying on outside contractors that were being paid for through the athletic department's revolving fund.

"We have some drivers who don't want to go over the Fore River Bridge and some who don't want to go to New Bedford," Collins said April 6. "We're not going to allow kids to drive all over creation because we can't expose people to the liability. We've had to cancel some things and that's crazy."

Collins' remarks drew an outcry from school bus drivers who attended the following meeting to explain their view of inefficiencies in the system.

Superintendent Edward Malvey said the town will receive a $32,009 settlement from its insurance company from a bus accident in February. Because the end of the FY-2000 is approaching, the insurance money will be deposited into an insurance fund that will be carried over when the FY-2001 fiscal year begins July 1. Malvey said Town Manager Mark Haddad told him that he would support a $20,000 request for the money to be used for the contract.

The remaining $10,572 would come out of the school department's revolving athletic fund. The revolving athletic fund is independent of the school budget, and is fed by user fees paid by student-athletes. Unlike the school budget, which is a fixed-dollar fund and is zeroed out at the end of a fiscal year, this revolving fund can be carried over into following fiscal years.

Water Testing

Water Commissioner John McNabb told selectmen Tuesday that the town's water system is being tested in order to pinpoint where the high levels of Total Trihalomethane (TTHM) is being generated.

McNabb said the water commission has been working with the town health board and state Department of Environmental Protection. He said right now it is not clear whether the high levels of TTHM, a byproduct of the chlorination purification process, originate in the town water supply, the water treatment plant, or the town's distribution system. McNabb said that once the results are known, he will "report back in full" to the selectmen.

McNabb said though the level of TTHM is at an "action level," and requires attention, there is no public safety threat.

Stone hazards

Town Manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen that the town can be held liable for problems arising from residents placing boulders or large rocks near the street to prevent people from parking on their lawns.

As it turns out, the town has a 40-foot right of way on every street, meaning that residents are illegally placing the boulders on property they don't own. Town counsel advised Haddad that the town can "be liable for damage caused by boulders placed upon a public way by town residents without permission from the Town."

Haddad said that the boulders can pose a public safety threat when it comes to plowing a road in the winter, or to cars pulling off the road to let an emergency vehicle by.

Selectmen said they will look at alternative parking solutions, particularly in the North Main Street area near the Little League field.

Town counsel policy approved

Selectmen adopted a new policy regarding use of town counsel in an effort to corral skyrocketing legal costs due to litigation involving the town. Through the first 11 months in FY-2000, the town accrued $186,689.72 in legal fees, with $200,000 budgeted. Though the town still has $13,310.28 available in the budget and could still come in under budget for the year, only twice have the town's monthly legal bills been under $14,000.

The new policy would require Town Manager Mark Haddad or selectmen chairman Tom Callahan's approval before any town employee or board member contacts town counsel, the establishment of budgets for litigious matters, and approval from Callahan or Haddad if town counsel needs to exceed the litigation budget.

Three-day license

The Nativity Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church on Jerusalem Road was granted a three-day liquor and entertainment license for its annual festival July 23-25. The license was granted as part of the Selectmen's consent agenda in their meeting Tuesday night.

Liquor license transfer ok'ed

Selectmen approved the transfer of the Cohasset Golf Club's liquor license from Barry Goughan to incoming manager Denise Carroll, providing that Carroll becomes Training for Intervention Procedures (TIPS) certified before the clubhouse reopens in July.

Though Carroll was unable to attend the hearing, Haddad said he had talked with her earlier in the day and recommended to the board that the transfer request be approved.

Selectman Michael Sullivan, a member of the club who was on the search committee that hired Carroll, abstained from voting.

Selectmen schedule

Because of a lack of agenda items, selectmen will not meet until July 11, providing no emergencies force the board into session. The board also announced their weekly meeting night will not be changed to Monday as it was scheduled to do next month.

Director of finance

Selectmen agreed to waive the normal 15-day review period and approve the hiring of Michael Buckley as the town's first director of finance. Buckley is no stranger to the town; he is also the town accountant, a role he will continue to perform. Buckley, whom Town Manager Mark Haddad joked was hired after a "nation-wide search", will be given a three-year contract running to 2003, and paid $70,000 for his first year.

Guard at RTF

Selectman Merle Brown said that as of July 1, a guard will be on duty at the RTF, turning away anyone without a sticker to dump. Brown said there is "no excuse" for a person not to have been able to obtain a permit, and said that they are available seven days a week, at either town hall of the RTF.

He also said that town residents will be able to dispose of their old latex and oil-based paint cans this Saturday at the RTF. Harzardous waste disposal will be held on Sept. 30.

Visitor spots moved

At the suggestion of Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters, the two visitor parking spots near the pier on Government Island will be relocated to near the Harbormaster's office. The move comes after a number of fisherman complained that the spots took away parking from them.

The new location of the spots is the third one, and it prompted selectmen chairman Tom Callahan to kid Town Manager Mark Haddad that there is a "three-strike policy." The spots were originally located near the Cohasset Sailing Club and were moved to another area on Government Island after the selectmen received complaints from the club.

DEP will penalize CHL for illegal material on slopes

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

All seems quiet on the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill front. Town Manager Mark Haddad confirmed that there have been no negotiations between the and CHL for about three months now. A judge ruled in the town's favor in a case involving the privately owned landfill and the conservation commission, but that was hardly an earth-shattering development. But things are not always as they seem. There are many CHL-related developments going on behind the scenes.

The most interesting development is the Department of Environmental Protection's behind-the-scenes plan to penalize CHL for placing too much material on the slopes of the landfill. DEP attorney Jean Argento said the state agency hasn't yet decided how it will penalize CHL. Argento said DEP will meet with CHL in the future at an enforcement conference to discuss possible penalties.

"We have been investigating CHL for some time now," Argento said. "We were in the back seat while the town took the lead; we had never closed our case. But now we're taking the lead. We have notified CHL of our intention to take an enforcement action, as we do in all such cases."

CHL-attorney Anton Moehrke said DEP had been in contact with his office about its plans to negotiate an enforcement action.

"That's one piece of a multi-faceted settlement we're trying to achieve," Moehrke said. "My sense is having a global settlement with the town is the best approach."

Argento said her next step will be to finalize her portion of the case. Once that is done, she will meet with CHL to negotiate an administrative penalty. Argento said it is too early to discuss what kind of penalty DEP will impose on CHL.

Sources familiar with the case say town representatives have suggested that CHL pay for a supplemental environmental project as a penalty for overfilling the slopes. One project that has been suggested is the dredging of James Brook.

Town officials estimated that CHL had placed more than 100 tons of excess material on the slopes, a violation of state environmental laws.

Dan Deutsch, one of the lead attorneys from town counsel's office, was asked about the negotiations, but said he could not comment on any aspect of the case.

Two years ago, town officials discovered that CHL had placed a massive amount of excess material on the slopes of the landfill. DEP requires landfill operators to fill a landfill in a certain pre-determined configuration. By pre-determining the angle of the slopes and the maximum height of landfills, DEP hopes to prevent landslides or other problems. Landfill operators are required to submit monthly drawings showing the current height of the landfill and the angle of the slopes.

In 1998, the Board of Health compared one of CHL's recent monthly drawings against a DEP overlay showing the approved configuration of the landfill. The overlay indicated that CHL had placed a huge amount of excess material on the slopes even as the landfill was approaching its maximum allowable height of 190 feet. Once a landfill reaches its maximum height, it must be closed. Town officials estimated that CHL had placed more than 100 tons of excess material on the slopes, a violation of state environmental laws. When asked previously how the extra material had ended up on the slopes, CHL-owner Paul Barry said "he eyeballed it."

The decision to take enforcement action against CHL for the slopes marks the second time in recent months that DEP has taken a tough stance against the landfill. On April 6, 2000, DEP responded in writing to a query by CHL-engineer Raymond Quinn asking the state agency about the possibility of using a 1995-issued Site Suitability Report to continue pursuing an expansion of landfilling at Area V. DEP rejected CHL's request. A Site Suitability Report is one of the critical documents a landfill needs to begin operations. CHL has been closed since July, 1997, but Barry has continued to pursue a plan to re-open the facility by utilizing a different section of the property known as Area V.

"It should be noted that should CHL be successful in obtaining a site assignment from the Cohasset Board of Health, no permit from DEP could be issued unless and until the outstanding enforcement issues resulting from the previous operation of the landfill have been resolved by both DEP and the town," DEP Regional Engineer for Waste Prevention, Edward H. MacDonald wrote in the April 6, 2000 letter.

Town looks to take over veterans memorial project

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen are looking to seize the lead of the veterans memorial project, citing that "nothing is happening" with the 10-year old plan to honor all the town's veterans. The board recently asked selectman Merle Brown to form a committee that would pick up the reins of the stalled project from the privately-funded Cohasset Military Memorial, Inc., which spearheaded the creation of the World War II memorial.

After a dispute over the correct ending date of the war, as well as missing veterans' names, the corporation has been quiet for more than a year, says Brown.

"I don't know what's happening with them. They've kind of come to a standstill," he said.

The issue came up at the June 6 selectmen's meeting when Town Manager Mark Haddad submitted a letter to the board from William F. Sullivan, a former Cohasset resident now living in Seattle, which expressed his sadness about the lack of completion of Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor.

"I was disappointed to see that this ambitious project had apparently ended with the erection of the honor roll for Cohasset's World War II veterans," Sullivan said in his letter. "As I further understand...there appears to be no organized program to continue the project with honor rolls with the names of those of us who left Cohasset to serve in the Korean and Vietnam Wars, or honor rolls for the Cohasset veterans of Grenada, Panama and Desert Storm.

"I find this to be unconscionable for a town with the resources Cohasset has available to it."

In 1993, a battle broke out over the proper ending date for the World War II memorial. Though the military aspect of the war ended with V-J Day on August 14, 1945, Congress did not end the state of war until Dec. 31, 1946. The federal government recognizes those who served in the occupational forces, after V-J Day, as World War II veterans. But the Cohasset honor roll did not include those veterans' names. In 1995, an agreement was made by the town and the corporation's head, Austin Ahern, to add the missing names. However, the names have not yet been incorporated.

Ahern said that he hasn't forgotten about the project, it's "just on hold."

Brown said the town has offered to take over the project from Ahern in the past, but that their attempts were declined. He said that he will attempt to form a committee consisting of representatives from the local Veterans of Foreign Wars and American Foreign Legion posts, as well as Ahern and other members of his committee, and then bring an article before town meeting in the fall to fund the project.

The veterans memorial at the harbor, started in 1993, has yet to be completed.

School projects on target

Cohasset Superintendent of Schools Dr. Edward Malvey told the school committee that the $42 million construction projects at the Deer Hill and Middle/High School are proceeding without a hitch.

According to Malvey, the school building committee established its meeting schedule up until March 7, 2001, the projected starting date of the projects.

Malvey said that the project will be advertised for bids on Dec. 6, with bids due in by Jan. 24. The March 7 starting date puts the project "right on target" for its expected summer of 2004 finishing date. Malvey also said the committee has monitored bids for a similar project in Freetown, Mass., and said that the bids have also been "right on target" with some of the bids coming in lower.

"That's a good sign," said Malvey.

He also said the project will be going out for another cost estimate in an effort to "hone the figures down."

Letter carrier to take the retirement route

Knew meaning of 'service' in postal

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Later this month, Henry Rattenbury will call it a day when he retires after 37 years with the U.S. Postal Service.

For Rattenbury, 63, the decision is bittersweet.

After 15 years on the same delivery route, the Briarwood Lane resident will miss his customers. But he won't miss the postal service, which, he says, in its drive for more and more productivity is losing the personal touch.

"The changes are not just here in Cohasset but in the postal system as a whole," said Rattenbury, describing today's post office as more of a moneymaking operation than a "service."

"It's less of a personal thing now that we deliver by rules and regulations," he said.

Rattenbury smiles when recalling how he broke the rules from time to time. There was the instance when a newspaper photographer caught him taking a break on the lawn near the American Legion Hall on Summer Street.

"It was a hot day with a nice breeze," he recalled. "I could hear a noise in the distance up Summer Street and this guy was taking pictures of me. I said, 'Hey what are you doing? Come here.'"

When the photographer asked for his name, Rattenbury quickly rattled off the name of another postal worker.

"Gerard Keating (who was postmaster at the time) went through the roof!" Rattenbury recalled when the photo turned up in the Patriot Ledger three days later. "And he said, 'look, they even got your name wrong!' It was a big joke in the office for years."

Another time, Rattenbury wrapped up a week's worth of mail and got into the harbormaster's boat so he could hand it to A.J. Antoine, who, at the time, was sitting in a lawn chair on Bassing Beach where he had a summer cottage. Someone snapped a picture of Rattenbury in harbormaster Harry Ritter's boat and delivered it to Keating.

"Gerard said, 'that's not part of your route,'" he said with a laugh.

With a career that spanned nearly four decades, Rattenbury has seen generations grow up.

"I've seen a lot of changes," he said. "I've seen families grow up, graduate from college and get married."

Rattenbury recalls how Dr. Robert Sceery's son waited day after day for news of his acceptance to Harvard.

"When it came, I thought he was going to hug and kiss me," Rattenbury said. "You get on a personal basis with a mailman when on a route that long."

> "You get on a personal basis with a mailman when on a route that long."
> — Henry Rattenbury

The other "job" that makes Rattenbury a familiar figure in town is serving as one of three elected sewer commissioners. His goal after nearly ten years on the board is being realized with the "sewering" of the Hillside neighborhood.

"The people waited so long," Rattenbury said about the area that is made up of homes with small yards and no place to upgrade septic systems. "The people couldn't wash their clothes."

As a letter carrier, Rattenbury is universally popular — but in his role as a sewer commissioner he's had to deal with numerous complaints. Although the town spent 20 years trying to solve its wastewater woes, now that the sewer in North and Central Cohasset is being installed — not everyone is happy.

"People have lost trees and shrubs and wonder, 'who do I complain to?'" Rattenbury said about the innumerable phone calls he gets at the house.

But complaints aside, Rattenbury is proud of the project that includes a state-of-the-art treatment system at the upgraded sewer plant that will send literally "drinkable" wastewater into the harbor.

Once June 27 rolls around, Rattenbury's first item of business in retirement will be to help his son Paul's family moved from Virginia to Arkansas. Rattenbury and his wife, Yvette, have four sons and four grandchildren.

After that, the Rattenburys plan to do some traveling and otherwise, enjoy life.

A cancer survivor, Rattenbury knows that each day is precious. And he'll treasure the memories of when, in his view, the "service" in postal service was paramount.

There was the woman on Atlantic Avenue that asked Rattenbury to call her brother if he ever saw the mail piling up in her mailbox because that would mean she'd become ill.

Or the folks that called from Florida because they'd forgotten to put a hold on their mail and ask Rattenbury to take care of it form them.

Once while on his route, Rattenbury heard a faint voice saying "help."

"Where are you?" he asked. The little voice was coming through the louvered vents in the attic of the house. An elderly woman had climbed up to her attic and the folding stairs had flipped up and closed, trapping her there.

"It must have been 125 degrees in the attic," he said.

Then there was a young, mentally retarded boy who would wait for Rattenbury at the end of his street every day. Rattenbury would sit him in the jeep and give him a ride back down the lane to his house. When the boy's mother saw Rattenbury years later, she nearly burst into tears because her son so looked forward to the daily ritual.

That trust he earned through the years is something Rattenbury won't forget.

"I always enjoyed getting up and going to work," he said. "And it's nice to know people appreciate you everyday when they get their mail."

An assault on open government

It is fitting but unfortunate that a serious assault on the public's right to know would come largely behind closed doors and without the benefit of public scrutiny. Such will be the case on Beacon Hill next week, when a legislative conference committee is expected to consider a major weakening of the Massachusetts Public Records Law.

Attorney General Thomas Reilly has proposed a sweeping change that would allow state and municipal officials to keep secret anything from local zoning appeals to major fraud investigations. Although the Senate rejected the measure, the House approved it as an outside section of the state budget. Despite strong opposition from Secretary of State William Galvin and others, the proposal is now scheduled for deliberation in a six-person conference committee next week.

The measure would allow government lawyers to keep their work secret from the public; a response to a public records case the attorney general lost to General Electric in which the electric company sought confidential memos and documents written by Reilly's staff. A judge ruled General Electric was entitled to the documents. Reilly responded with a proposed "attorney-client privilege" exemption to the public records law, arguing government lawyers should be able to conduct strategic discussions in the same manner as private attorneys.

While perhaps well-intended, Reilly's proposal has far-reaching implications for the way government operates in Massachusetts, from the State House to town hall. With a simple label of "potential litigation," this proposal would allow government officials to cloak nearly every issue or deliberation in secrecy.

We suspect the liberal application of the proposed exemption is something government officials would relish, but it would impede a fundamental part of democratic government: the public's right to know and comment, discuss and debate. Of course it's easier to conduct legal strategy - and all business, for that matter - in private, but that was not the intention of the founding fathers in establishing this democracy, nor should it be something we are willing to accept today.

Galvin, whose office oversees the Division of Public Records in Massachusetts, has been vocal in his opposition to this measure. In addressing the Massachusetts Press Association Thursday, Galvin argued that any effort to weaken the public records law would make it more difficult for average citizens to monitor government activities. Galvin offers a compromise in which the exemption could be more narrowly drawn to protect government legal strategy, while ensuring that a broad interpretation of the law is not employed.

We don't necessarily agree any change is necessary, but we are willing to have the issue discussed publicly. It's hard to accept Reilly's motives as being sincere when this measure was slipped into the House budget with little debate or notice near the end of the legislative session. It's sloppy lawmaking, and only bad laws can come of bad process.

We strongly recommend the conference committee kill this budget amendment and that Reilly bring the issue to the light of public debate. Two hundred and twenty-four years ago, our forebears succeeded in creating a government that is accountable to its people and the principles of that revolution should be the unshakable pillars on which we build today's democracy. Reilly's proposal is an assault on those principles; the effective oversight of politicians and process simply cannot continue without open and easy access to information.

Election policy

The Mariner encourages submissions from candidates for state and local races in the September and November elections. Throughout the months ahead we will host a candidates forum in our newspaper where candidates are allowed to submit statements of no more than 200 words addressing issues.

The statements will be run on a space-available basis and may be edited for length and purposes of taste and libel. Readers will be informed that the statements are the views and facts as the candidate sees them.

During the election season we will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or from residents who are writing to endorse a candidate. Further questions about our policy should be directed to the editor.

In addition to the forum, we will run regular stories on the issues and profiles on the candidates. We encourage readers to provide us with feedback on issues they would like explored in the coming months.

Speed limit

TOWN MANAGER

We are writing to express our agreement with Mark Bell's (460 King St.) letter published in the May 11 Mariner. Mr. Bell's assessment of the potential for tragedy at JJ's Ice Cream is on the mark. While standing in line or sitting on a picnic bench at JJ's, one feels extremely vulnerable. Traffic races by at speeds in excess of 50 mph while kids run around the unprotected parking lot. The speed limit needs to be reduced and additional measures should be taken to reduce the possibility of a serious accident.

As a resident of the new Rose Hill development, we ask that you reduce the speed limit until the Stop & Shop complex. We have the same issues pulling in and out of our development that Mr. Bell attributes to JJ's. There are close to 25 children currently living here and many more visiting. From the southbound side of 3A, waiting to turn left into Rose Hill is a harrowing experience. With our two-year-old son in his car seat, we nervously check our rear view mirror hoping that our blinker has been seen and we will not be rear-ended and pushed into oncoming traffic in the northbound lane. Pulling in to Rose Hill from the northbound side of 3A is also treacherous, as there is a rise in the road shortly before you reach our entrance allowing drivers very little time to react to vehicles braking and turning in front of them. Exiting the development is equally challenging, especially for visitors unfamiliar with traffic patterns.

A 50-mph speed limit is dangerously inappropriate as the main access in and out of Rose Hill. Please take this opportunity to consider reducing the speed limit from before JJ's until at least the Stop & Shop complex.

Village redesign

TO THE EDITOR:

I've had it! Now we're told that a non-profit corporation controlled by the local oligarchy is going to redesign our village. That's an insult to all the wonderful people who have built and who run the businesses that make up Cohasset Village. These hardworking men and women who own and run places like Cohasset Hardware, French Memories, Really Great Pizza (RGP), Village Wine & Spirits, Cards & Shards, Olympic Texaco, The Children's Exchange, etc., have made Cohasset Village unique. They don't need some oligarchy telling them what sort of business they should be in or what their business should look like.

What the village needs is help from the town, and the selectmen and the town manager need to attend to it. The village needs trash pickup on the weekends (the barrels are overflowing), it needs strong granite curbing to keep the SUVs and trucks off the sidewalks, it needs sidewalk repair and a level, safe sidewalk with an outside berm around Cohasset Greenery, and it needs some sensible parking rules. Allowing one hour parking during the day when it's crowded and only 15 minutes at night when it's not makes no sense at all.

There's nothing complicated here. The town can do it. We don't need expensive studies or consultants or so-called non-profit corporations to tell us what to do. We just need the will to do it.

I'm willing to help in any way I can.

Ad hominem sniping

TO THE EDITOR:

Russ Bonetti has suggested that I may be in the category of "pompous hypocrites." Well, maybe, but I'm immensely comforted by all those kind souls that called up to say things like "Gee, I don't think you're both, at least not at the same time."

Mr. Bonetti seems to have missed the point of my letter, which was to decry the snide attribution of dishonest motives to anyone who volunteers some public spirited gesture. Beats me why he should rush to the defense of such mean-spirited and counterproductive behavior.

I have not been associated with the Learning Lab for a long time, and share Mr. Bonetti's dismay that its bright promise seems to have faded. Undoubtedly there are more significant reasons besides the ad hominem sniping, but that surely didn't help.

Water flow

DEAR MS. BUICK:

This letter is in response to your letter dated May 27, 2000. Due to numerous delays in getting the sewer project and water main project started last spring, the Water Department was able to complete the replacement of your water service July 15, 1999. The work that was performed was what we had discussed earlier, in letter dated Dec. 2, 1998. The service connection was excavated and checked for adequacy. When the line was finally located, back to the end of the water main (near the hydrant), it was found to be a 3/4-inch line which in turn was broken down to serve both #1 and #3 Highland Avenue. The two services were disconnected and a new individual service was installed for #3 Highland Ave. Prior to completion of this service, the Water Department checked the pressure in the line and was found to be very good from the main to your shutoff, as witnessed by a neighbor.

On Aug. 6, we received a call from you indicating that the flow was great, and because of this, it was believed that the problem had been resolved. We are planning, along with Tutela Engineering, to perform some fire hydrant flow testing in various areas throughout the system. I have requested from Tutela to add the hydrant on Highland Avenue to their list. This work is tentatively scheduled to be performed prior to the end of June 2000.

Tutela Engineering is also investigating the possible replacement of some of the piping near the end of Highland Avenue and Highland Court. A decision on this work will be forthcoming following a discussion between the Board of Water Commissioners, Tutela Engineering and the Water Department.

Spectacular spring/summer recipe for delectable richness

By Jean White
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Have you ever wondered why it takes such a long time for your compost bin to turn your yard waste and kitchen scraps into "black gold?"

Perhaps it's because you don't have the right recipe.

As most of us know, if you are planning to turn out a wonderful batch of cookies or a tasty lasagna, you have to get the right proportion of ingredients in your mixture. The same is true of your composting efforts.

Here follows a recipe for success and the reason for following it.

Using four parts of fresh green material to every one (1) part of dead brown material is the secret.

In order to break down the material in your composter you need the proper mix of carbon and nitrogen. Microorganisms, which are the decomposers of this material, need carbon for energy and nitrogen for growth. Materials high in carbon are generally brown and dry, while materials high in nitrogen are usually fresh and green. If there isn't enough nitrogen in your compost, the material could sit for years without starting to decompose. A good supply of oxygen is also necessary to keep the decomposition process going, so turning the material is an important part of the process as well.

Some good sources of nitrogen:

- fresh grass clippings
- green yard and garden waste
- coffee grounds and tea bags
- egg shells (crushed)
- uncooked fruit and vegetable waste
- farm manure

Some good sources of carbon:

- dead leaves
- sawdust and wood shavings
- straw or hay
- wood ash
- black and white newspaper — torn or shredded
- brown paper bags — torn
- paper napkins

It is possible to make compost in a corner of your yard or garden, but it is often easier to keep materials together if you use a compost bin. If you are looking for a good model, your recycling committee has the Earth Machine Composter available for $25 at the RTF. This is an enclosed bin, easy to assemble, which comes with instructions for complete home composting.

However you choose to recycle, just remember the magic formula: a ratio of approximately four parts "green" to one part dead "brown" material and you too can "cook up" a rich recipe guaranteed to please all your hungry growing garden friends.

(Material from this article found in "How to Make Superior Compost," by Home Gardener Manufacturing Co.)

This week's column is by Cohasset Recycling Committee member Jean White.

Meet reporter Rick Collins

The Cohasset Mariner is pleased to announce the naming of Rick Collins as the paper's new town reporter. Collins joins the paper from the Beacon Hill/Back Bay Chronicle in Boston.

Originally from Brockton, Rick graduated with high honors from Curry College in 1999 with a degree in politics and history, and is finishing up his master's thesis project for Boston University's College of Communication.

He served as editor-in-chief of the student newspaper at Curry for two years, and also spent more than a year in the Patriot Ledger's sports department as an intern.

"Rick is going to be a great addition to the paper," says editor Mary Ford.

Collins counts reading about politics and local history and following the Boston sports scene as his hobbies, and welcomes discussions about either.

He replaces reporter Brian Brennan who has followed his passion for sports to a position at ESPN.

Collins can be reached at the Hingham office at 741-2935, or in Marshfield at (781) 837-4501.

How to stop random calls

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Around 7 o'clock every evening, just as I'm curling up in the easy chair to watch the seven millionth rerun of "M*A*S*H" on the FX Channel, the phone rings.

I'm not so agile as I was when I was young (and ice covered most of the earth), so by the time I put down my glass of Carlo Rossi paisano and untangle myself from the foot robe, the call is on its fourth ring.

I pick up the instrument only to hear a click on the other end, and I realize I have been duped again into missing one of Hawkeye Pierce's witticisms by an (expletive deleted) telemarketer.

Telemarketers, those folks who call you at random to sell you a service you don't need from a company you never heard of, have been voted one of the top four common household vermin, along with roaches, rats, and maggots.

Or if they haven't, they should.

One of the latest tricks used by telemarketers, I am told, is the "predictive dialer," a machine that dials several numbers at the same time, then hangs up on all but the one who answers first.

Which means that if you let it ring, pretty soon it goes away, only it might be Regis calling to offer to make you a millionaire, or it might be that obscene phone call you've been looking forward to but never got.

How do you deal with telemarketers, particularly those who call just as that souffle is reaching critical mass or you have been summoned to perform an extremely personal function that simply can't wait?

How do you deal with telemarketers, particularly those who call just as that souffle is reaching critical mass or you have been summoned to perform an extremely personal function that simply can't wait?

Tom Mabe, a jingle writer from Louisville, Ky., has created a number of scenarios guaranteed to throw the telemarketer off his or her stride, and he has produced an album full of the best ones.

It's called "Revenge on the Telemarketers Round One," and if Round Two is anything like it, then put me down for a copy right away.

My favorite from Round One is the one where Mabe tells the telemarketer selling home security systems that "I'm robbing the place right now, but you might call back; these folks could use one."

Or the one where Mabe tells a caller selling cemetery plots that he considers the call a sign from God because he'd been thinking of committing suicide.

"Ask them anything stupid," says Mabe. "Throw them off the script."

My personal favorite is to ask them, even before they've launched their spiel, the question, "Where did you get this number?" in the tone of voice John Gotti used to use with a mark who was a month behind.

If I've got time, I'll engage them in chitchat — "Where are you calling from? Oh, I was there back in 1965. Do they still sell those Belgian waffles in the coffee shop at Main and Broad? Have you ever had them there? Did you like them?" etc.

My son was overheard one day informing a telemarketer from AT&T, who was trying to sell a long distance service, that "My father is the vice president of SPRINT."

Of course, you could avoid all this just by calling the telephone company and having your name and number placed on the"do-not-call-under-penalty-of-listening-to-a-telemarketer-for-a-week"list.

But Tom Mabe's way is more fun.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Air traffic

Mr. Ira M. Wallach
Senior Legal Counsel
Aviation & Environment
Massport

Thank you for your prompt response to my request of May 26 regarding operations at Logan.

FAA Order BOS TWR 7040 1F, dated 11/17/98, prohibits landings on 22R between the hours of 11 p.m. and 6 a.m., yet landings on 33L are not only allowed, but between midnight and 6 a.m. are a matter of first order priority.

In the directive the tower is ordered to use 33L. It states, "between midnight and 6 a.m., the supervisor shall ensure the use of the following runway priorities - to land, (a) 33L. . . ".

To add further emphasis to the directive (and insult to injury) Paragraph 1 of Appendix 1: Opposite Direction Traffic-Runway 15R/33L:

In an attempt to further reduce aircraft noise, particularly during the hours of 0000 to 0600 local time, it becomes even more important for us to use Runway 15R for takeoffs and 33L for landings."

This particular instruction allows Fedex and UPS aircraft to roar over houses on the South Shore at 4 a.m.-but over no house to the west or north of Boston, apparently.

As the enclosed map indicates, the communities of Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and Hull lie directly under the approach to 33L. The FAA directive with the Appendix clearly disadvantages these towns. Perhaps you would be willing to share with us the reasons why the FAA has taken this discriminatory action.

I understand that level 3 noise suppression aircraft are the ones permitted to land after 11 p.m., even though I don't see this in the directive. Europeans are now moving to level 4. Perhaps this could become a requirement for operations in and out of Logan between 11 p.m. and midnight. I note that landings on 22R must be limited to aircraft with a specified noise emission level of 78 dBA or less. This might be a useful guideline for landings on 33L between 11 p.m. and midnight as well.

On the issue of departures, I notice that as flights depart runway 9 they shall be vectored south of the Hull peninsula and allowed to turn west in the vicinity of the 10-mile range mark and cross the shoreline above 6,000 MSL. This, of course, allows them to pass over our South Shore communities.

Since we have lots of ocean to work with, I suggest they be vectored out at least 20 miles, and allowed to turn over the coast above 10,000 feet. This issue came up in operations out of Nantucket. Aircraft must climb to a certain level before turning north to Boston - which effectively prevents them from flying over the island. This principle can be used with great effect here as well.

I assume, as this dialogue continues, it becomes a federal matter. With a copy of this letter I bring this to the attention of my two Massachusetts Senators, who are in a position to work with the FAA towards a resolution.

My suggestion to the FAA is this:

Departures at any time turn west at the 20-mile range mark, and cross the shoreline at 10,000 MSL.

Only aircraft with a specified noise emission level of 78 dBA or less be allowed to land on 33L between 11 p.m. and midnight.

Traffic between 0000 and 6 a.m. be diverted to Providence, or Worcester - with Logan shut down, following the lead of Reagan Airport in Washington, D.C., London's Heathrow and Tokyo. If these cities object, diversions farther out can be arranged - Maine, for example. If our Congressmen can do it for themselves, they can do it for us.

Relay For Life

TO THE EDITOR:

As the Regional Executive for Development at the American Cancer Society, I want to express my heartfelt thanks to everyone who joined the Relay For Life at Cohasset High School June 9 and 10. Approximately 800 area residents took part in this year's event raising more than $100,000 for the fight against cancer!

Funds raised will enable the American Cancer Society to continue its local service programs for cancer patients and their families, education on prevention and early detection of cancer and a world-class research program that has supported 30 Nobel Prize winning scientists.

Special thanks to event chairman Craig Bleicken and the volunteer planning committee whose teamwork made the fourth annual Relay For Life in Cohasset a tremendous success! The committee worked so hard planning this event over the past six months and I thank them from the bottom of my heart! I would also like to recognize and thank our sponsors including the Red Parrot Restaurant, the Red Lion Inn, Atlantica, the Cohasset Mariner, Cohasset Rotary Club and Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. In addition, I'd like to extend a sincere thank you to Cohasset resident Anthony Everett of WCVB-TV Ch. 5 for speaking at the Closing Ceremonies and helping us clean the field on Saturday.

Although cancer continues to touch so many of us, the Relay For Life is an emphatic statement of our hope that, soon, this disease will be conquered. Your American Cancer Society is here if you need us.

Strikes a nerve

TO THE EDITOR:

The article criticizing Sen. Robert Hedlund regarding the Greenbush controversy strikes a nerve with many of the anti-rail, pro-transportation crowd.

Hedlund had always said that if the Scituate Board of Selectmen would take a vote on the rail, it would have an impact on the Legislature. Since the town meeting vote in 1995 opposing the rail, we have repeatedly asked Scituate's board to take a vote. Not until Selectman Ralph Crossen was elected chairman in April, 2000 was a vote taken. Could this be because our state Rep. Frank Hynes (a vocal rail supporter), when running for reelection in 1996, stated on an "On the Mark" debate that he would support the position of the Scituate Board of Selectmen as advocates for their town?

The Hingham selectmen, unaware that Scituate planned to take a vote the following day, voted to sign the Memorandum of Understanding with the MBTA. After becoming aware that their lawsuit had virtually been lost, they did what they and their lawyers believed would protect the majority of those adversely affected. They refused to support the project, instead agreeing to no longer oppose it. There is a big difference.

Hedlund's Senate amendment speech opposing Greenbush, within two weeks of the Scituate Board's vote, said Hingham voted "with a gun to their heads."

Hedlund has consistently and repeatedly opposed the restoration of Greenbush as not in the best interests of the affected towns. Hedlund was instrumental in organizing Legislative and Army Corps hearings at which I have seen him unwavering in his concern for the adverse impacts restoration would have on his district. Hynes, who should have been advocating for Scituate's interests and others quoted in this article were missing and/or silent at these hearings.

experience for me."

In addition to the crafts and activities, food was also an ever-present temptation to festival goers, with eight different vendors on site this year. Choices ranged from extravagant fare such as lobster, to traditional, time-honored favorites such as hot dogs and hamburgers. Given the hot weather for much of the weekend, ice cream proved to be more of a necessity than a luxury (on second thought, this is New England; where ice cream is always a necessity).

Though all choices mentioned above would prove to be thoroughly satisfying, none were more formidable than the strawberry shortcake being served up by the Second Congregational Church, as part of its annual Strawberry Festival fundraiser. Whether you are, like myself, a first-time (but certainly not last-time) visitor of the Festival on the Common, or an annual attendee, like Cohasset residents Rob and Linda Simms, it quickly becomes common knowledge to keep an eye out for the lady in the red and white checkered apron who makes her rounds around the festival grounds, and not let her pass you by!

Debbie Flanagan and Diane Kennedy, who served as event coordinators at the festival (and introduced me to the shortcake lady, for which I will be forever grateful), expressed their gratitude to the 125 volunteers whose hard work and dedication helped the event run so smoothly. "One incredible aspect of this year's festival was the tremendous efforts put forth by the volunteers. Mary Ann Lynner and Sue O'Brien, both of Cohasset, were so well organized, and rounded out a fantastic group of very dedicated people. Sally Fletcher, also of Cohasset, was responsible for lining up the youth group of volunteers, who did a fantastic job of handling so many of the behind-the-scenes details of festival operations."

Monica McKenney, director of development and public relations for the South Shore Art Center, also praised the volunteers, saying, "they were all terrific, enthusiastic and well informed. They left the grounds of the common absolutely pristine following the event, which is always a concern following something as large-scale as this. We are deeply grateful to all of them."

McKenney also made mention of the increased art sales over last year in the main exhibition tent, which she feels, "reflects a higher level of excellence in the art exhibits, and signifies that more people are attending with the intent to buy art featured at the exhibition. There is a definite respect for the works on display." The panel of experts who judged at this year's festival included; Joel Janowitz, a teacher at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, Audrey Pepper, who owns a gallery on Newbury Street in Boston and Mary Violette, a teacher at U - Mass and Tufts University.

According to Bustin, the Art Center has received a lot of positive feedback from people who attended this year's festival. "People have stressed to us how relaxed everything seemed at the event. There were not as many vendors as in years past, so there was more open space to move around and browse. The parking situation was also significantly improved over last year. Even though we had to deal with some challenging weather at times, everyone seems to have thoroughly enjoyed themselves. It was a splendid time."

Swim center began as dream of a few

Trustees came together 30 years ago to build the facility

By Brian Brennan

If you build it, they will come.

In 1970, seven Cohasset residents knew the need for a town swimming facility. Members of the 90-member Cohasset Swim Team were doing their best to practice, but having to visit private homes to use residential pools wasn't exactly an ideal situation.

On November 23, 1970, the Cohasset Swimming and Recreation Trust was created, with the goal of raising enough money to build a swim center which would be open and available to the entire town.

"The initial idea was spawned by John Meyer, who had been a swimmer at Yale," said Dr. Robert Scerry, one of the seven original trustees, along with Jane Cook, Jessie Cox, Frederick Good, Jr., Herbert Hoefler, Richard Leggett and Meyer. "I swam at Harvard at the same time John swam at Yale, and I thought it was a wonderful idea."

The trustees knew getting tax dollars for the project would be next to impossible, so they decided to raise the funds privately, through tax-deductible contributions.

The trustees managed to raise $350,000 to build the Cohasset Swim Center, breaking ground on the facility in the fall of 1973.

Byrne headed to national baseball tournament

Cohasset resident a part of AAU South Shore Seadogs

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's Brendan Byrne, a student at Milton Academy, will be headed to Atlanta in August to play in the Amateur Athletic Union Arby's Super 7 World Series.

Byrne is an infielder on the South Shore Baseball Club's elite Seadogs AAU 16-and-under baseball team, which has been invited to compete in the prestigious tournament from August 9-13 on the campuses of Georgia Tech and Kenesaw State University.

The Seadogs accepted the invitation from the host East Cobb Astros, an AAU baseball powerhouse, and the six-time defending 16-and-under Junior Olympics champions. The Seadogs have gained a place among the nation's elite in their own right, finishing third in last year's nationals.

"This solidifies SSBC's position as one of the premier AAU 16-and-under teams in the country," said SSBC director of operations and 16-and-under head coach Rick DelVecchio. "It's very exclusive, invitation only, and will be the most highly scouted 16-and-under tournament in the country."

The host East Cobb Astros have more than 25 former players in major league baseball, including pitcher Kevin Millwood of the Atlanta Braves and catcher Jason Kendall and pitcher Kris Benson of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The other five invitees to the tournament are the Bayside (Fla.) Yankees, whose former players include Seattle Mariners all-star shortstop Alex Rodriguez and Kansas City Royals outfielder Johnny Damon, the Chet Lemon Juice (Fla.), the Orange County (Calif.) Dawgs, the Blue Springs Sluggers (Lawrence, Kan.) and the Maryland Orioles, sponsored by the Baltimore Orioles.

Byrne's spot on the seadogs roster is impressive, as the team draws players from throughout Southeastern Massachusetts and even Rhode Island.

The players include LHP/1B Mark Rosen (Xaverian/Randolph), C Craig Stinson (BishopHendrickson/ Providence, R.I.), OF Jason Houser (Cardinal Spellman/East Bridgewater), RHP/OF Brian McDonald (Bishop Feehan/Foxboro), RHP/IF Nick Kulinski (Wareham), C Eric Rasmussen (Nauset High/Orleans), OF Pat Bregoli (North Quincy High/Quincy), RHP Mike LaFort (Lincoln High, R.I.), LHP Thomas Thornton (Middleboro), C Matt Page (Plymouth North, Plymouth), OF/LHP Keith Doherty (North Quincy, Quincy), RHP/IF Jesse Cole (Scituate) and SS Kory Delahanty (St. John's Prep of Danvers/Salisbury).

The Seadogs will also take part in a skills competition and home run derby as part of the Arby's Super 7 World Series.

Former Cohasset High boys basketball coach John LeVangie recently celebrated his 300th win as a high school coach.

Former Cohasset boys basketball coach celebrates 300th win

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

John LeVangie started out his coaching high school basketball at Cohasset High in 1978, but he's gone a long way since his days coaching in Sullivan Gymnasium.

After two years, he was off to Boston College High School, where he skippered the Eagles squad during the heyday of the Catholic Conference for 10 years.

LeVangie would eventually leave the Div. 1 scene and coach at Westwood in the Div. 3 Tri-Valley League for much of the 90's before landing at Wayland.

Wherever he coaches, no matter what level, there is one constant for LeVangie, and that is winning. This past year, LeVangie picked up his 300th career win.

"It was great," said LeVangie. "A lot of memories came back to me. I thought of a lot of the kids I coached."

Among LeVangie's fondest coaching memories are his days at Cohasset.

"We went 17-4 Paul Farren's senior year," said LeVangie. "It had been a long time since they had done that well. We scored with two seconds left to beat Middleboro."

While LeVangie's coaching career has taken him away from the South Shore, the Scituate resident still pays attention to the local high school basketball scene. He likes what he has seen from Cohasset boys basketball coach Ron Ford.

"He's a younger guy who is really committed to the job," LeVangie said.

In his 22 years of coaching, LeVangie has seen the sport evolve. Perhaps no sport has changed as much as high school basketball, whether it's the shot clock, the three-point shot, or the two 16-minute halves instead of four eight-minute quarters.

"The main thing is, I don't think the kids have changed," said LeVangie. "If anything,

Legion squad is still in first place

Tough slate of games await Cohasset/Scituate team this week

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset-Scituate Legion baseball team, off to a terrific 6-1 start, has remained in first place in their tough and competitive league despite a three-game losing streak which dropped its record to 6-4.

"We're still in first place, but don't ask me how," said coach Scott Arnold. "We've had a lot of kids on vacation and with other commitments. We still haven't been able to field a full team and put kids in their natural positions."

The team, known as George H. Mealy Post 118, is about to embark upon its "toughest week of the season," according to Arnold. They were to play the top Quincy team Wednesday night, face Milton at home on Thursday and are on the road Friday against a tough Braintree team.

The squad has loaded its lineup, both offensively and defensively, with outstanding performers from Cohasset High, Scituate High and B.C. High.

From Cohasset, Greg O'Keeffe and Nick Bolster have been terrific starting pitchers this year. As part of a tremendous pitching staff, both threw no-hitters this past season for Cohasset High School.

"They have pitched unbelievably," said Arnold of the whole staff, including

'They will be remembered'

1,500 come out for Clancy-Darling race

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Last year, there were 1,100 participants in the first annual Clancy-Darling Road Race, which raised $25,000.

It was an impressive turnout, and the first-year road race was generally considered to be a smashing success. Organizers knew they would be hard-pressed to match those numbers for this year's race.

However, they reached those numbers and then some, as over 1,500 people turned out on Sunday for the second annual race held in honor of three Pembroke teenagers killed in a car accident on their way to Notre Dame Academy in September of 1998.

"We never expected the turnout to be such a huge thing," said Mary Darling, whose daughters Allison and Erin died in the accident. "You look out and you just see a whole mass of people. Everybody we've asked for help has come through."

Ann Clancy, whose daughter Colleen was also a victim in the accident, was overwhelmed by the support.

"I'm just blown away," said Clancy. "It's so emotional. I'm getting hugs from everybody. It's very heartwarming. Between scholarships, the library, the community center, so many people are going to benefit from this. They will be remembered."

As for the event itself, more than 400 people registered that day, adding to what was already an impressive number. Many appeared in the one mile walk, while others did the two mile fun run and the five mile race.

Sean Quigley, 15, of Braintree, came in first in the fun run.

"I knew I'd come in the top five," said Quigley, who is entering his sophomore year at Archbishop Williams, where he runs track. "My older sister went to Notre Dame and was in the same class as the older girls."

The rolling 5-mile course had as much to do with Chris Mahoney's record-breaking time of 27 minutes, six seconds as the competition did.

The Plymouth resident, who ran the steeplechase and 5,000 meters at UMass-Amherst, felt comfortable tucking himself into a tight lead pack, which formed shortly after the swollen field of 296 runners broke from the starting line at Silver Lake Senior High School.

STAFF PHOTO/SUSAN HANEY

Chris Mahoney breaks the tape, winning the 5-mile run at the Clancy-Darling Road Race on Sunday.

George Rose of Kingston, a popular face on the South Shore racing circuit, was also in the lead pack, which included Mahoney, 1999 winner and course-record holder John Monahan, Silver Lake's mile and 2-mile record-holder Mike Piche, Jonathan Mogul and Joe Kelley.

It was Rose, who coached cross country and track at NDA from '81-89, who broke the race open with a strong move at the 2-mile mark. Rose's surge dropped everyone but the ominous Mahoney.

The group cruised passed the mile mark in a conservative 5:20, but slowed to a pedestrian-like 5:40 over the rolling second mile. Mahoney, who is more accustomed to a faster pace, wasn't going to let the pace lag for much longer.

"Everybody tried to feel each other out that second mile," said Mahoney.

Rose intended to put in a big move over the third mile. The slow pace only made Rose's decision to move, and move hard, that much easier.

"I was getting ready to take off at 2 when I heard (the split was) 5:40," he said.

Mahoney immediately went with Rose as he surged ahead and the two separated themselves from the rest of the pack with a 5:27 third mile. Mahoney pressed the pace even harder and shook himself clear of Rose with a 5:23 fourth mile.

With no challenges left, Mahoney cruised down Center Street and coolly broke the tape in front of the Pembroke Recreation Center, chopping 43 seconds off John Monahan's 27:49 record from a year ago and 34 seconds in front of Rose.

Rose, the top master, also dipped below the former record with his 27:40. Monahan finished third in 28:00 and Piche was a strong fourth in 28:06. Jonathan Mogul took fifth with a time of 28:11 and Joe Kelley's 29:08 was good for sixth.

Weymouth's Sarah Shapiro barreled away from the women's field and ran to a 33:58 victory. Tiffany Riley was second with her 34:52 and Denise Fine took third in 35:21.

Mahoney, who makes a point to race in the slew of Plymouth races and the lightning-fast Carver Cranberry event during the year, gave the Clancy-Darling race rave reviews.

"It was a good course to run," said Mahoney "I liked it."

Rose, just one of hundreds of runners associated with NDA, said he knew race director Rick Kates, the Aces' current cross country and track coach, well, and commended him for putting on such a runner-friendly race over a scenic course.

Kates admitted this year's race was "bigger than expected," but the 300-plus volunteers, including a crew of Massachusetts State Track and Field Officials, did a yeoman's job in pulling it off.

"I knew it was going to be big, but I didn't know it was going to be this big," said Kates. "This was just awesome. Tomorrow we start getting ready for next year."

Kates said he is his own "biggest critic" and made note of subtle tweaks that could be made to improve on next year's race. He expects an overall field in excess of 2,000 in 2001. "It's very organized but there's something that always goes wrong," he said with a smile

"It's great for the families," Kates said. "It's a good way not to be sad and celebrate their lives."

I think they might be a little more committed. With AAU, the kids are playing year round. They play 75-110 games a year."

It used to be that when the high school season was over, coaches were concerned that their players would not be practicing in the off-season. Now, they're concerned that their players might burn out from focusing too much on one sport.

"I always preferred my kids to play three sports," said LeVangie. "Then in the summer they could play their favorite and go to camp. They do something other than playing one sport year round. It's a lot to do 12 months of the year."

Of course, there have been many highlights along the way.

"My own son playing for me at Westwood was special," said LeVangie. "He started at point guard all four years."

The Wolverines qualified for the tournament all four years, contending for the Tri-Valley League crown each year.

"Every night, every game was a battle," said LeVangie. "Dover-Sherborn, Medfield and Bellingham were probably the three strongest teams we'd face."

In the early to mid 80's, the Catholic Conference had some spectacular teams.

"Catholic Memorial, BC High and Don Bosco were all really strong," said LeVangie.

The Don Bosco-BC High battles were legendary.

"They were big," said LeVangie. "We'd have games with Bosco over at UMass-Boston, and they would sell out. You couldn't get in, and it was just the regular season."

The talent on the floor for those showdowns would be enough to make Rick Pitino drool.

"One year, we had three starters who went on to get college scholarships, and this was Div. 1," said LeVangie. "Bosco had five kids go on to Div. 1 schools. We beat them at their place, and they beat us at UMass-Boston. We ended up as co-champs. That was good basketball. That was more like college basketball."

LeVangie also coached the Eagles to the state finals in 1981, where they lost to Patrick Ewing and Cambridge Rindge and Latin at Boston University.

Another team he had at BC High defeated Randolph in six overtimes in the tournament. His squad then rallied from a 22-point deficit to beat New Bedford. The Eagles then went out to Worcester and beat Springfield Classical.

"That was a big win for us," said LeVangie. "That got us into the state finals, but we lost."

Often times, no matter how great the coach, the sport passes them by. That has not been the case with LeVangie.

"I've always been involved with the kids," said LeVangie. "I've been a guidance counselor all along, and I've coached three sports (softball and field hockey have been the others). From one season to the next, I'm not away from the kids. The kids are basically the same."

For the first time in his career, LeVangie finds himself coaching basketball at the same school where he teaches.

"I know all the kids," said LeVangie. "I see them during the day. It's definitely a plus."

At 57, LeVangie doesn't see himself slowing down anytime soon.

"I just gave up softball this year," said LeVangie. "The athletic director stepped down, so I took that on in February. I don't feel worn down. In fact, I'll probably coach tennis next spring."

It was a good experience for LeVangie.

"This spring was not the season to be an AD," said LeVangie with a laugh. "All that rain, what a nightmare."

Of course, he got to see things from a different perspective.

"I got to go to all of the different games," said LeVangie. "I was more of a fan. I wasn't losing sleep over coaching decisions."

Wayland eventually found a new AD for next year, allowing LeVangie to stick to coaching, something he feels fortunate to be able to do.

"The 300 wins were the players," said LeVangie. "You can be an awfully good coach when you've got the players. It's gone by fast. Twenty-two years, we've made the tournament just about every year except two. I hope to do it for a little while longer."

Swim center began as dream of a few residents in the summer of 1974, but not without some difficulties along the way.

"We had a lot of problems with wells and getting use of residential land," Sceery said. "Luckily, we were able to gather a lot of assistance, mainly from Jane Cook and John Weeks."

When the Swim Center opened in 1974, one of its tenets was to charge fees which only covered operating expenses. No resident was to be denied use of the pool because of an inability to pay.

Twenty-six years later, fees are still set only to cover operating expenses and no one has been denied because of an inability to pay.

Sue Mavilia, a member of the Swim Center's Board of Directors, said the goal of the seven original trustees to make the facility open to the entire town has been carried on.

"I think it's important for everyone in the town, especially the newer people, to realize the tireless effort the trustees put into this place," Mavilia said. "We've tried to manage the Swim Center as a facility open to everyone, as the trustees intended."

Because fees are still set only to cover operating expenses, funding improvement projects at the Center must be done in a way other then raising membership fees.

The Swim Center is holding a family event this Saturday, June 24, from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. to raise funds for a shade structure over the deck area and diffused light over the toddler pool.

Events at the fundraiser will include water games, a bake walk, yard sale, and a raffle, where prizes will include guest passes, a family membership, a Gym Dandy birthday party at the Community Center and various prizes donated by local businesses.

"It will probably be a two-stage project," Mavilia said. "The light diffuser is to help shield the toddlers from the sun. The shade structure will have a lot of uses. We have a lot of birthday parties, so if it's one of those drizzly mornings, it's nice to have a solid roof. It will also be a place where people can just get out of the sun for a little while."

Sceery's original plans for the Swim Center were more grand, but he said a year-round facility was cost prohibitive.

"It's always been a dream of mine to have an indoor, year-round pool, but we never got to the point where we could winterize it," Sceery said. "It would have cost $2 million at the time, and it just never came to fruition."

While Sceery would like to have been able to construct an indoor pool, he and the other trustees still contributed a lasting legacy to Cohasset, evidenced by the growth of the swimming and diving team in town.

The team has grown from 90 members in 1974 to over 190 this year, and over 850 children are enrolled in the three, 3-week sessions of the Red Cross Swim Program.

O'Keeffe and Bolster. "Usually in Legion, I have to use two or three guys per game. But these guys going the distance, six or seven innings, it really has helped me save arms."

The other exceptional pitchers in the starting rotation are Tim Duggan and Jesse Cole. Both from Scituate High, they have performed extremely well in this young season..

Also from Cohasset is all-star centerfielder Doug O'Brien, who led the South Shore League in batting average this past season.

But to have a successful team, everyone needs to contribute, not just a handful.

"On this team, there are no heroes," said Arnold. "They are all playing hard. I would have to list all 18 players in order to be fair."

The league in which Cohasset is playing has been strong for years. At the top of the league with a record of 6-3, Cohasset has been turning heads and raising eyebrows after turning in horrendous seasons the past few years.

Even the coach has been pleasantly surprised at the effort of his club.

"I expected to be a little better than .500 [at this point in the year]," said Arnold.

Working under Arnold has been assistant Coach Ralph Barry, who has been helping Arnold manage the squad in practices and games.

"He's done a great job teaching the kids; giving them tips on base running and hitting," stated Arnold.

Cohasset recently lost 6-2 at home to Canton, but managed to hang on to their fi game lead over Weymouth (5-3).

Canton improved to 3-3 on the year.

Coach Arnold was disappointed with the loss, but took it in stride and maintained a positive outlook.

"We played real poorly, and we didn't swing the bats well. I can guarantee better results for next time."

At the rate the team is going, it should shape up to be quite an enjoyable season. It appears you don't have to get paid the big bucks to be considered the Boys of Summer.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

COMING TO TERMS

When it comes to selecting carpeting, it helps to be familiar with some common terminology. Cut pile is the classic carpet that has a smooth, velvet-like texture that lends a plush feel to a room. The longer the yarns, the more luxurious the feel. For high-traffic areas, hard twist (also known as freize) carpets provide much the same soft texture, but its tightly twisted yarns are less likely to fray and show footprint patterns. Cut-and-loop pile features yarns that are alternately cut and left looped. This adds subtle texture and pattern underfoot, and hides wear and tear. Loop pile, with its nubby texture, has no cut ends to show footprints. It is best used in high-traffic areas. Saxony has the most formal appearance, whereas the very textured carpets lend themselves to casual areas.

You are likely to have visitors walking across certain areas of a room very frequently. Foot traffic, stain resistance, and soil resistance are all important elements to consider when you select carpeting for your home or office. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can take the mystery out of selecting the right flooring for your space. Our thoughtful, individualized interior design plans include the selection and coordination of flooring, window treatments, wallcoverings, and furniture. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation. We hope to have the opportunity to help you with your decorating needs.

HINT: Berber loop pile traditionally featured neutral colors, owing to the fact that each looped yarn was a blend of natural, undyed fibers.

Liquor license hearing highlights problems

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Though Cliff Chase of Village Wine and Spirits on South Main Street admitted to selling alcohol to two Scituate teenagers on May 20, he blamed the infraction on fake IDs.

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, Chase told the board that on May 19, he asked for identification before selling Bruce Beagley and Thomas Jewett alcohol. When the two teens came in the following night, Chase remembered them and didn't ask for any ID.

That night Cohasset patrolman William Quigley spotted the two youths exit the store with a 12-pack of Busch beer and get into Beagley's car. Quigley pulled the car over and discovered that the two youths were 19. Beagley was arrested on the spot for possession of alcohol. Police said Jewett fled and was apprehended hours later in Scituate. He was charged with possession of alcohol, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct. Both teens said that Chase sold the alcohol to them.

At the hearing before selectmen, Chase admitted to selling to the teens and received a written warning.

"There is a big burden and big liability on the owner or manager of the license."
Town Manager Mark Haddad.

But the issue that dominated the hearing was the use of fake IDs and their increasing sophistication. High-powered image scanners, and design programs allow far more accurate fake IDs to be created.

"There is a big burden and big liability on the owner or manager of the license," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "If the license is at all suspect, they should reject it."

"There is a high burden, but [store owners] have to be more diligent in their efforts," said Police Chief Brian Noonan. He said a store or bar can always just refuse to serve someone, and said that some places will not accept anything but a Massachusetts license.

Noonan said that police have distributed a 100-page booklet to all local bars and package stores that contain images of licenses from all 50 states. He also said that stores and bars are now able to purchase a machine that can scan IDs and say whether the ID is fake or has been tampered with.

Being caught with a fake ID could result in a six-month suspended driver's license.

Neither of the two Scituate teens were carrying fake IDs when arrested, police said. Their court case was continued without a finding for three months, and both youths were charged $50 in court costs.

Selectmen react to MBTA's mitigation stance

Callahan floated the possibility of following Hingham's lead in filing a lawsuit against the MBTA. In an interview after the meeting, he said if Cohasset appears to be receiving the short end of the stick from the state, that the town should consider a legal injunction.

"I have made no secret that I am against Greenbush. I consider it an economic and environmental boondoggle. I am upset on the T's current position of pulling its offer off the table. In the (selectmen's) meeting I said it certainly has the appearance of being duplicitous and I stand by that," he said.

"I'm not saying that the town should file suit," he continued. "But it seems that the only town in the Greenbush corridor that is getting what it wants, is, because it did file suit and gained some leverage...[If Cohasset or Scituate] find we are not getting our minimums, then we should not foreclose the possibility of filing a lawsuit."

Michael Sullivan suggested at the meeting that the town ask state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray to set up a meeting with Cellucci to discuss the status of the project.

Last month, MBTA liaison Kevin Dasey presented Cohasset with six items that the MBTA would be willing to offer as a mitigation package, including a new well on Sohier Street, an access bridge for Rocky Lane and a $100,000 preservation fund for historic properties. On June 5, mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber presented Dasey with the town's 26-item wish list, including mitigation for the watershed and flood control, parking and traffic studies, a new fire station on the west side of the tracks and a $2.1 million historic preservation fund.

A few days later on June 9, Dasey notified Gruber and Town Manager Mark Haddad that the MBTA had pulled its six mitigation items off the table.

Haddad has said that although he doesn't know the reason why the MBTA backed off, he said he thinks Cohasset and Scituate looked at the Hingham settlement and told the MBTA they wanted a similar mitigation package.

Greenbush would be the third commuter rail line in the South Shore. Chances of restoring the line appeared slim until Hingham reached a mitigation agreement with the MBTA last month that calls for a $40 million tunnel to be constructed under Hingham Square and a $1.35 million historic preservation trust fund in return for Hingham dropping its lawsuit.

MBTA spokesman Brian Pedro said the MBTA has not left the mitigation table.

"We built the other two lines of the Old Colony project and thought we were very fair when it came to mitigation, while at the same time upholding our responsibilities to the taxpayers," he said.

Bus service farmed out

Stephanie Noble, vice-chairman of the school committee, supported this move because of the amount of money spent on transporting athletes to and from games. "It's the second biggest line item (in the transportation budget)," she said.

Town meeting would have to appropriate the $20,000, Haddad said. But the school department may not have to dip into the athletic revolving account for the balance. In an interview Tuesday, Haddad said he told the superintendent that he would support a town meeting article appropriating the full amount.

Malvey said that the bus company will provide management and service to the buses, which are town-owned, and the contract is expected to begin with the new fiscal year.

Ingle also provides bus service to Hanover Public Schools, Thayer Academy and Falmouth Academy. Joan Coulstring, a spokesman for the company, said the owner is open to hiring the Cohasset drivers, provided they meet company guidelines.

"If they were good for Cohasset, they'd be good for us," she said. "Good bus drivers are hard to find."

The remaining $12,009 from the insurance settlement is being eyed for the purchase of a van, Malvey said. The van would be used to transport smaller teams or school groups which are now taken in large buses.

Osgood technology position still not in the budget

But parents may try to fund position privately

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Concerned parents may try to privately fund the eliminated technology position at the Joseph Osgood School, after attempts to make the school committee reevaluate the cut failed.

Chairman Patricia Martin said at last week's school committee meeting that the budget for the upcoming school year has "been sealed and voted upon and it would be very difficult to go back."

The comments came after parents Barbara Baumgarten and Ann Brophy presented a petition bearing the names of 158 people expressing their concern that Cohasset schoolchildren would fall behind in the technology education. Brophy cited from the Massachusetts Department of Education's curriculum guidelines that were outlined as part of the 1993 Education Reform Act, from which all state public schools must base their curriculums. The guidelines Brophy cited said technology should be included in a school's math, science and health curriculum. Brophy also pointed out that technology is included in three of the seven criteria for accreditation.

Martin said the school committee understood the need for technology in the classroom, but said the school budget could be facing severe deficits due to a possible cut in special education funding from the state.

To help squeeze the needed money for three new teaching positions and an afternoon bus run for kindergartners from the $9.24 million budget – the school board agreed to eliminate the technology aide at Osgood, among other cuts during budget talks in February.

Superintendent Edward Malvey said he saw this as a "temporary move," but would not guarantee that the position would be included in next year's budget.

However, last week the school committee did say that it would support attempts by parents to raise funds for the $24,000 a year position, through fund-raising, private donations, or corporate grants.

"I do believe that if we are able to raise the funds, they will support that," said Baumgarten, in an interview last week. She said there currently are six other people besides herself interested in organizing a fundraising effort. She said the group will ask other parents to donate their time and energy to the effort.

"I don't know whether we will fund raise through an event or some other way," she said, adding that the group is "pursuing other avenues" in particular trying to identify corporations or foundations that help sponsor technology in the classroom projects. But she said that many of those grants have deadlines which have already past, or are approaching.

The school committee said that if the group raises the money for the position, it would use it for its intended purpose, but said that it will not hire someone until the money has physically been handed in. "We can't say yes to the position until the money is in the bank," said Stephanie Noble, vice-chairman of the committee.

Other money raising methods Baumgarten suggested in her presentation to the committee were earmarking of any money that becomes available in the budget for the position; reconsideration of nonessential expenditures like the second kindergarten bus; and perhaps charging for outside groups to use the school's computer labs.

Noble said money could not be reserved for a particular position because of the unknown deficit that the school system might incur with a loss of special education funding. School committee member Mark DeGiacomo added that the town might have to pay more money than expected to fill the vacant special education director position, as well as the principal's position at the middle/high school.

Martin expressed reservations about charging for public use of the computers. "Our intent was not to ask the community for thousands of dollars for technology and then said 'Oh by the way, we're charging you $50 to use it.'" She also said the move would not be beneficial in the long run as the additional wear and tear on the computers would reduce the computers operational lifetime.

Baumgarten said that if her group does raise the money, the school department should not expect the same type of effort next year. "This is a one-time effort to raise funds for that position. We want [the position] put back in the budget."

Technology instruction for the more than 700 students of the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools, as well as coordination of the Cohasset school system's technology department will be overseen by teacher Ken Cisneros.

Towns may buy Arrowood site with help from the state said they have "interested parties" in 13 of the 17 lots.

John K. McNabb, Jr., chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission, said officials met Monday morning in Scituate to discuss a possible purchase. Also at the meeting were Scituate selectman Rich Lane, environmentalist Vin Bucca of Clapp Road, George Zoto of the state Department of Environmental Protection and Robert O'Connor of the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs.

"The good news is that Scituate and the state are interested," McNabb said. "We're hoping the state can come up with a good amount of cash."

O'Connor of the EOEA is evaluating the interest at the state level, McNabb said. If they get the go-ahead from the state, then the next step would be to get an appraisal and talk to the developers. The amount the state and towns would pitch in must also be determined.

McNabb said the state, Cohasset and Scituate would all win by purchasing Arrowood that could be added to Wompatuck State Park.

The towns and state all share an interest in preserving open space, McNabb pointed out, and Scituate would gain direct access to the state park.

"Scituate would also like to protect our water supply because it's there for their emergency use as well," McNabb said.

McNabb said Scituate and Cohasset already have an intermunicipal agreement to tap into each other's water supply in an emergency.

As far as Lane is concerned Scituate may have been interested even earlier to team up with Cohasset on the Arrowood project, but Lane said the town was engrossed in other projects like the McDermott property when they were first asked to get involved last year.

His understanding of any further arrangement with Scituate would involve that town being able to use Cohasset water on a temporary basis — perhaps up to six months — in case its water supply was somehow polluted.

"We've done that in the past, when Scituate was building its water treatment plant," he said. "But we have a potential political problem if we're talking about anything above that.

"As long as we serve our customers in Cohasset no problem, we can also serve Scituate a small percentage of the time," McNabb said.

Bjorkland, the developer, said an arrangement to share water between the two towns should have nothing to do with Arrowood.

"It's neat if the two towns can work it out," he said. "But it does not relate to Arrowood or its septic systems."

Bjorkland, who expects to begin construction of six-to-seven homes within 30 days, said he and Winchester have met all the regulations that were in place when Scituate approved the subdivision three years ago.

"The DEP has said 'everything is fine,'" he said. "We went through a lot of scrutiny to get this thing through including being regulated by special permit and not being able to use salt, herbicides or pesticides."

He said there are homes along Cohasset's Lily Pond water supply that are more of a threat to the water supply than Arrowood is. And Bjorkland said Scituate could find better ways to spend its money.

"Scituate has a lot more property that has more value to the Scituate water system to spend money on than the Arrowood property," Bjorkland said.

"It would be premature," said Lane, the Scituate selectman, to consider buying any property until the idea was presented to others.

Lane said the meeting on Monday when the issue was discussed was the first of many more.

A lot of interest on the project was expressed on the part of the state, he said.

"The possibilities are boundless," Lane said.

Cohasset girl to star in new TV series

wish I knew more, I just recently got my driver's license!"

Steve Antin, the creator and executive producer of the show, praised Bosworth. "With that translucent skin, those bee stung lips, and remarkable eyes, which are actually three colors, Kate is an authentic beauty. Compliment that with raw, intelligent natural acting ability, and you've got a star."

"Remember the Titans" is based upon the true story of the integration of a Virginia high school football team in 1971. Jerry Bruckheimer is the producer and it stars Denzel Washington.

In the movie Bosworth plays "Emma Hart", an insular girl, who dates a team co-captain. "She's not really sure about anything new," said Bosworth.

While on location filming the movie Bosworth had the opportunity to meet the actual coaches from the time of the team's integration. "It was so amazing. They would bring pictures of the old team and tell us stories. It was a lot like the script."

"It was cool meeting Denzel Washington. I admire him as an actor, and he was so sweet with me. I'm working with all of these great people ! My first movie was with Robert Redford, what a wonderful opportunity!"

The movie was "The Horse Whisperer", in which Redford starred and directed. Bosworth, an equestrian, played the part of "Judith", the best friend of the female lead. Judith dies in a horrific riding accident, a scene in which Bosworth performed most of the stunt work herself.

After completing work on "The Horse Whisperer," the Bosworth family moved to Cohasset, and Kate took about 18 months off to acclimate herself to her new surroundings. Cohasset is a town she enjoys. "It's so small, it's nice, everyone kind of knows each other. It's kind of like one big family."

Throughout her time at Cohasset High School where Bosworth will be a senior in the fall, she has been on the high honor roll, and is a member of the National Honor Society. Being on location requires being tutored, and the family reports that the school has been extremely understanding and cooperative about her time away. While saying that her tutoring is going well Bosworth admits she misses day to day life at school. "Sometimes I wonder what so and so is doing right now," she said.

Besides being an equestrian, Bosworth has also been a member of the varsity lacrosse and soccer team.

This incredibly energetic young woman also has found time to volunteer. She has given time to therapeutic riding organizations and last year participated in the Appalachia Service Project, sponsored by the Second Congregational Church.

"That was a once in a lifetime experience. I lived with a family there (in Appalachia) for two weeks. You bond with them. You tend to rethink your values. It's a real true friendship. My family needed another room built because their 12 year old boy had outgrown the room was living in. We did not take pity on them, we just said, 'hey, we're here to help!'"

LIBRARY CORNER

Local celebrities bring summer series to life

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

A firefighter, a police officer, a fisherman and a doctor will lend some extra flavor to the Paul Pratt Library's summer reading series. Cohasset fire chief Roger Lincoln, police chief Brian Noonan, fisherman Pete Flaherty and Dr. Steven Golden are scheduled to come dressed in full "uniform" and be guest readers at the library's story hour throughout the summer.

"We wanted to do some different kind of story hour," said librarian Janet Husband. She said the library has had a regular bedtime story hour reading in the past but thought the addition of local celebrities would be an extra attraction.

First up will be Chief Lincoln on June 27. Lincoln is expected to read "Fire Cat" by Judith Averill, along with any other favorite books he may have.

"When I went to the Osgood School and told them they were going to come, there was a very good response," said children's librarian Suzanne Terry.

Husband said the library wanted people who were representative of the town. Terry said the readers were contacted and were "very responsive" to the idea.

First up will be Chief Lincoln on June 27. Lincoln is expected to read "Fire Cat" by Judith Averill, along with any other favorite books he may have. He will be followed by Golden on July 18, Flaherty on July 25 and Noonan on August 8. All readings begin at 7 p.m. at the Pratt Library on South Main Street. For more information, call 383-1348.

Family fun-raiser

Join the Cohasset Swim Center on June 24, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. (raindate June 25) as it splashes into the 2000 season with a fun-filled day. Fund-raising events include water sports, a family cookout, bake walk, membership raffles and a huge yard sale. Come with your family and with an appetite. Grill chefs will be ready to serve you. Proceeds to be used for such projects as a shade structure and perimeter expansion.

Please help support your swim center. Donations needed: yard sale items can be dropped off at the swim center on June 10 and June 17 between 8 a.m. and noon. Helpful if items are tagged. Please no clothing. Wrapped baked goods also needed on the day of the event.

For more information, call Trish Fortin, 383-2025; baked goods call Andrea Martone, 383-9791.

A taste of Greece at Taverna

The largest Greek festival in Southeastern Mass. is being held again this year at the Panagia Greek Orthodox Church, 811 Jerusalem Road.

This year's festival will be held on Friday, June 23, from 1 to 9 p.m.; Saturday, June 24, from noon to 9 p.m.; and Sunday, June 25, from noon to 7 p.m. Admission is free. Rain or shine.

There will be many new features this year, promising to make Taverna 2000 the largest and most exciting ever. Joining regular performers, the Panagia Children's Dance Troupe, the Terpsichore Dancers, DJ Harry and the Asteria Band, will be a Greek dance troupe coming all the way from St. John Renti High School of Attica, Greece. Taverna 2000 is also hosting the singer/songwriter of Greece, Dimitrios Zachos.

As always, Taverna features fine Greek cuisine. Start with some Greek appetizers: stuffed grape-leaves, Kalamata olives or feta cheese with fresh tomatoes. For dinner you can enjoy roasted leg of lamb, souvlaki, loucanico, mousaka, pastitsio, spanakopita and gyros. If you still have room, you can stop by our "Greek Pastry Shop" where you'll find loukoumades, diples, galaktobouriko, kadaifi and baklava. Maybe you can't pronounce it, but you'll love it, organizers say.

There will be hotdogs and cheeseburgers for the kids and to wash it all down there will be soft drinks and Greek beer and wine for the adults. Don't forget to visit the "Greek Coffee House" when you're through.

Taverna 2000 accepts Visa and MasterCard and most of the menu is available for take-out.

Taverna, a word which means a café where you go to sit and philosophize while you listen to foot-tapping Greek music. Taverna, the place where you can go to enjoy the very best in Greek cuisine. Taverna, the place where you can experience all the sights and sounds of the Mediterranean Greek Islands. And we have it all right here on the South Shore, courtesy of the Greek Orthodox Community of Cohasset.

Kids shows at Music Circus

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the final Music Circus registrations for "The Frog Prince" and "Cinderella" on Tuesday, June 27. Music Circus Children's Show registrations will be open to children in the playground program and the show date for "The Frog Prince" and "Cinderella" is Thursday, July 13, and July 20 respectively.

Music Circus registrations are held at the recreation office, first floor, town hall. Registrations will be held from 9 a.m. to noon and again from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. All tickets for the Music Circus are $6.

Registrations are held each Tuesday according to the above times, two weeks prior to the actual show date.

Each year the center celebrates the arrival of summer with children's games, live animal demonstrations and a nature walk. The admission is $1.

Refreshments will be available.

For more information,, call 781-749-1248.

World's End

The Trustees of Reservations has announced that its 17th annual Summer Solstice Celebration will be held on Wednesday evening June 21 from 6 to 8 p.m. [If weather is questionable, please call the World's End Ranger Station at 781/749-8956 after 4 p.m.] So pack a picnic supper, load the entire family into the car and join many of your friends and neighbors atop Planter's Hill for a most entertaining evening.

Tractor-drawn hayrides will be offered from 6 to 8 p.m. The night's festivities will be highlighted by the musical entertainment of the Ecuadorian musical group Yarina which means "Remembrance." Yarina's members, who are descendants of the Incas, will perform a selection of colorful music on a pan pipe, wood flute, guitar and drum. As always, soft drinks and popcorn will be available and cookies will be provided for dessert.

An admission fee of $5 for members of The Trustees of Reservations and $7.00 for non-members will be charged to cover expenses. Children 12 years and under will be admitted free. Sorry, no dogs.

World's End, a peninsula of two glacial drumlins joined by a narrow beach of rough sand, divides Hingham Bay and the historic Weir River. For over a century, this 251-acre property has been admired for its dramatic topography and magnificent landscaping.

Its winding, tree-lined roadways were designed by famed landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted in 1890 as part of a proposal to develop World's End as a "planned community" of more than 150 homes. Thankfully, the proposal never came to pass and the land was farmed and maintained by its owners as a private park. In 1967, through an extraordinary public and private effort, World's End was saved from development and The Trustees was able to purchase the property and preserve it in perpetuity.

Today, World's End with its quiet walks and panoramic ocean views, offers visitors opportunities for a wide range of activities such as jogging, horseback riding, cross-country skiing, nature study and photography.

To reach World's End, follow Summer Street from the rotary at Hingham Harbor 1/4 mile to the first set of traffic lights and turn left onto Martin's Lane. Follow Martin's Lane 1/4 mile to its end where the entrance to World's End is located.

For more information about the Summer Solstice Celebration, please call Marge Balzotti at The Trustees' Southeast Regional office. Telephone: 781/821-2977.

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.
Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

Selectmen get crabby over Lobster Lab issue

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

More than two and a half years after first proposing the creation of the Lobster Lab, lab president Kevin Ulmer remains in hot water.

Selectmen approved a letter Tuesday, to be sent to Ulmer telling him "it has been over two years since the Town entered into a lease agreement with you and as of this date, there has been no progress towards completion," and said that failure to show progress [in the exterior improvement of the Hagerty Building by the second selectmen's meeting in September] may force the Board to begin taking steps to revoke the lease with the Lobster Lab."

Chairman Tom Callahan said "I do believe we need to bring [the issue] to a head," and repeatedly said that the town needs to decide whether or not to "fish or cut bait."

"I believe we made it clear that this summer is a make or break summer for him."
— Selectmen chairman Tom Callahan

However, selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed voted against sending the letter.

McMorris' objections stemmed from Ulmer's annual review with the board in March, at which time McMorris said the board made it very clear that it was unhappy with the progress of the lab.

"But I don't believe we gave him a deadline," she added. "I don't think it's appropriate to give him two months notice."

However both Callahan and selectman Merle Brown said that Ulmer has known about the board's displeasure, and the September deadline should come as no surprise to him.

"I believe we made it clear that this summer is a make or break summer for him," said Callahan.

Back in 1998 Ulmer entered into a lease with town for the town-owned Hagerty house, which is the former office and showroom of Cohasset Colonials, located on Parker Avenue with the idea of creating a research lab for studying lobsters, under the premise that Ulmer renovate the building. Ulmer is currently in discussions to merge with the Cohasset Maritime Institute, which leases the boathouse also located on the Hagerty property.

Ulmer, who has said he is behind on his fund-raising effort, recently told the selectmen that he authorized $15,000 to be spent on renovations, which are underway.

Though the board has already met with Ulmer for the annual review of the Lobster Lab, the letter says the board will consider finding him in violation of his lease if selectmen decide Ulmer has not made sufficient progress by September.

Town looking for a few good residents

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen announced a number of vacancies on various town committees at the board's meeting Tuesday.

The boards with a multiple number of vacant seats are the Arts Lottery Council with two vacancies; the Conservation Commission with one member vacancy and two associate vacancies; the Commission on Disabilities with two vacancies and an open seat for a representative of the Committee on Elder Affairs; and the Drug and Alcohol Committee with seats available for two student representatives, a representative from the school committee and the Parent School Organization.

A vacancy also exists on the Historical Commission.

Selectmen also abolished two committees and will keep one committee quiet. The Computer Advisory Committee and Traffic Study Committee were broken up after a unanimous vote by the board. Selectmen, acting on the recommendation of Town Manager Mark Haddad, agreed to keep the Housing Partnership Committee "dormant until something comes up."

Anyone interested in filling one of these vacancies should contact Haddad at Town Hall at 383-4105.

Pilgrim Hall Museum director Peggy Baker took a trip to Hollywood with one of the museum's rare 17th century artifacts. The piece was the big star of the game show "I've Got a Secret" which will be aired as part of a Thanksgiving episode in November.

17th century artifact is star of Hollywood game show

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Peggy Baker has a secret, but nobody will find out what it is until Thanksgiving.

Baker recently returned from Hollywood, Calif. where she was taping an episode of the classic game show called "I've Got A Secret" on Oprah Winfrey's new "Oxygen Network."

Baker is the director of the Pilgrim Hall Museum in Plymouth, which houses precious 17th century Pilgrim artifacts, and her job was the premise for her visit to Hollywood.

When Baker was chosen to appear on "I've Got A Secret," she was asked to bring a 17th century artifact from the Pilgrim Hall museum to the show, but she had to conceal what the artifact was.

"Executives of the (Oxygen) network found Pilgrim Hall on the Internet. Our website is really nifty. The people from the station called me and told me they were putting together a Thanksgiving show."

Peggy Baker, director of the Pilgrim Hall Museum

She appeared on the show with the artifact safely stashed away in a special case.

The panelists on the game show were asked to try to guess what was in the case through a series of "yes or no" questions. Baker said the most famous panelist who appeared that day was Teri Garr, star of several hit movies including "Young Frankenstein," "Tootsie," and "Mr. Mom."

Eventually, one of the panelists guessed what Baker's object was, but the television watching public will not find out what the artifact was until November, as the episode will not be aired until Thanksgiving.

Baker said "I've Got A Secret" was a game that

Quincy has the blues

John Mayall headlines at annual festival

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

He's known as the Godfather of British blues. He gave Eric Clapton his start in the business. And he's coming to play in Quincy on Sunday.

John Mayall, singer/harpist and veteran of nearly four decades in the international blues scene, is the headliner of this year's eighth annual City of Presidents Blues Festival, at Quincy's Veterans Memorial Stadium on Sunday, June 25 from noon to 7 p.m. The British blues legend is the yearly, outdoor festival's biggest-name bill-topping act yet, following its debut of nationally-known headliners with singer/harpist James Cotton at last year's event.

Also on the bill for this year's fest, an all-star lineup of local and New England-based acts, including soul/blues vocalist extraordinaire Mighty Sam McClain, perennial area blues/rock favorites the James Montgomery Band, ex-Radio Kings frontman Brian Templeton and guitarist/vocalist Mike Welch with their new band project Big Blues, guitarist Steve Murphy & the Yardrockers and singer/guitarist Ricky "King" Russell.

In his own right, Mayall as a bandleader has performed a distinct and evolving blues style over the decades, often venturing into jazz-influenced fusion experiments.

The show will start off with a 15-minute set called "Hats Off To the Blues," featuring the Yardrockers Young People's Jam, hosted by Yardrockers keyboardist Scott O'Brien, and also feature 10-minute acoustic sets by Boston club-rocking duo Matt Woodburn (guitar, vocals) and Cheryl Arena (harmonica, vocals) in between regular sets throughout the day. Returning once again as the Fest's emcees are DJs Holly Harris, host of WBOS's "Blues on Sunday," and Peter Black, host of WATD's "The Wide World of Blues."

The COP Blues Fest is produced, as always, by Joe Hajjar, owner of the Yard Rock blues club in Quincy. Since debuting in 1992, the day-long, family-oriented, alcohol-free blues festival has found a solid niche on the schedule of summertime entertainment events, even gaining national corporate sponsorship and media attention. Hajjar feels that landing Mayall as this year's main attraction is just one more step in the event's careful but steady progress in its first eight years.

"When we made the move to try to get John Mayall as headliner," said Hajjar, "we knew we had to be in a position to raise money with the festival, which is needed to have the buying power for acts of his caliber. But going into our eighth years, we feel now we have the confidence to negotiate at this level. It's not that booking and planning and organizing for this type of event neccesarily gets easier as time goes on, but it feels easier. We're established now and we've got friends in the business."

Mayall, 66, has led his flagship band, the Bluesbreakers, in numerous configurations since 1963. In the mid 60s, the singer/harpist/band-

CD shoots for handgun safety

Marshfield producer unites all-star line up for benefit album

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Have you been following the handgun violence-related headlines lately?

Chances are you've found it hard to ignore them. The numbers of deaths and injuries resulting from handguns nationally may have taken a significant decline in recent years, following the epidemic record highs of a decade ago.

But reports from Boston, New York and other areas nationwide in the latest months have indicated that violent handgun incidents are on the rise once again.

Folks in the music business have been following the headlines too. That's why the Cambridge-based Rounder Records Group, through an arrangement with Universal Music & Video Distribution, is set to release an all-star benefit compilation CD by summer's end, with proceeds to support the Stop Handgun Violence Organization. The Newton-based SHV Organization is a non-profit group whose goal is to prevent gun violence not by banning guns but by advocating personal responsibility, public awareness, practical legislation, increased manufacturer responsibility and strict law enforcement.

One of Rounder's and the SHV group's main record-biz contacts in the benefit disc project is Marshfield musician, studio and executive producer and production consultant Brian Stratton. An impressive lineup of nationally known recording acts from rock and pop to country, swing-blues and alternative appearing on the compilation is largely owed to the promotional and networking efforts of Stratton over the last several years.

"I first got in touch with the Stop Handgun Violence Organization in 1995," said Stratton. "I've been in support of them on various levels since, going to meetings, and spreading the word. Then the next year, John Rosenthal, the group's founder and chairman saw my

Things that bug Jim Carrey

The comic actor makes a goofy movie but shows a serious side

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

Charlie (Jim Carrey) endures one of the hazards of the open road.

Before asking Jim Carrey anything about his newest movie — the Farrelly brothers comedy "Me, Myself & Irene — specifically about the soon-to-be-infamous breast-feeding scene or about the physical hardships of doing most of his own stunts, before talking with him about how his approach to comedy and acting has changed over the years or how wealth has changed him or about romancing his co-star Renee Zellweger or what it was like to play the lead in his next film, "How the Grinch Stole Christmas", before all of that, there's a more important subject to broach. Jim, after stunning performances in "The Truman Show" and "Man on the Moon," why do you think the Academy ignored you?

"They're bastards," says the man with the rubber face matter of factly. He pauses and whispers, "But you know, I've gotta be careful about what I say."

So there's Carrey in all his glory, making what might be a serious statement, then chasing it down with a joke. Much like Charlie and Hank, the two-in-one, Jekyll-Hyde character he plays in his new film, there are definitely two sides to Carrey.

But on this day, although he often can't stop himself from throwing in a goofy aside from time to time, the sensitive, down-to-earth Carrey shines through.

"I honestly feel that I'm so gifted in my life that I don't sweat those things," he says, still in reference to his Oscar snubbing. "I have a great life. I have great people in my life. As a person who came from talking through his butt, I'm able to work with Peter Weir and Milos Forman in serious projects, and somehow the public has allowed me to do that. I also understand that the Academy's experience of me over five or six movies was a very crazy comedic persona. And in two dramatic films, I just don't think they're gonna bend that far. It's gonna take me a while."

Carrey certainly knows that it's his unabashed flights of frantic comedy that have made him a household name. Peter Farrelly, who, with his brother Bobby, co-directed Carrey in "Dumb & Dumber" six years ago, is happy that Carrey has returned, at least for now, to his silly side.

"It sounded like Jim had made a big change when he made 'Man on the Moon,'" says Farrelly. "He was in the character and that was well documented. But when he came back to this one he was the same guy that we knew from years ago. And it was great to have him doing that old comedy that he's so good at."

Carrey, though, doesn't feel that he's the same guy he was.

"I think I'm getting better as I go along," he says enthusiastically. "It's just like my life, like my schooling. I left school halfway through the 10th grade, but I read and schooled myself, plus I dealt with drunks for 15 years in comedy clubs, and that's a Ph.D. of some kind. So it's just growing, getting deeper and more involved psychologically. The drama is rubbing off on the comedy and the comedy's rubbing off on the drama. And it's a blast. I have to say I have the best job. I'm fascinated with human behavior and why it happens. And it's like being a psychiatrist or some kind of scientist where you have to break the character down to some place where you can sympathize with him, whoever you're playing."

"I have a great life, I have great people in my life. As a person who came from talking through his butt, I'm able to work with Peter Weir and Milos Forman in serious projects, and somehow the public has allowed me to do that.

Jim Carrey

Well said, but what about that breast-feeding sight gag in "Me, Myself & Irene," in which Carrey's bad guy character somehow manages to take the place of a suckling infant without the mother realizing?

"That scene was wild," he says. "It's very rare when I get into a place where I actually am kind of humiliated, and that was one of those scenes. It was so embarrassing to me. I was embarrassed for the girl. But she was fine with it. She was like, 'Yeah, whatever. I didn't even notice.' But I was literally apologizing to her between every take."

Carrey might also have had to apologize to his own body after some of the things he put it through in making the film. He believes that if a stunt isn't life-threatening, he should do it himself rather than have a stunt man perform it.

"It's like the Buster Keaton comedy tradition," he explains. "The audience wants to know it's you doing the bit. And a lot of these things are bits that won't look the same with someone else's physicality. Especially somebody who's trained to tuck and fold and do all the safe stuff. It's not gonna look the same. The spazz will be lost. I was hurting myself every day. I would go home and say, 'Oh, jugular's open. Damn!' I just wouldn't notice till later. I woke up with bruises. I was beat up pretty badly. But in the moment you don't really think about it. You're just going for the comedy."

A few years ago, when Carrey was working on "Dumb & Dumber," he met, wooed and eventually married his co-star, Lauren Holly. They divorced a year later. When he and his current co-star, Renee Zellweger, began dating, tongues started wagging about Carrey always going after his leading lady.

"I don't go into these things hoping, like, 'I'm gonna get this one,'" he says, obviously just a tad tired of hearing about it. "That's not how I operate. I won't go into personal details, but I will say that we had the most wonderful, old-fashioned, tremendous type of courtship. We're having a great time and I think she's absolutely a gem of a human being. And one of the best actresses I've ever seen in my life. That's why I wanted her in the movie in the first place — not to go after her but to be supported by somebody who I could learn something from, and trust to be able to stand on her own."

There's no leading lady, per se, in Carry's next film, the live-action, Ron Howard-directed "How the Grinch Stole Christmas," due for a mid-November release, and featuring Carrey under a lot of make-up.

"That was amazing," he says of his experience on the film. "It's a total honor to be part of. I felt like I won the lottery, being able to be the Grinch. But I looked at him like someone who was not just an angry guy. Because nobody's just an angry guy. What we are is hurt, whether it's self-imposed or something happened to us. And it manifests itself in that, and that made me able to make him sympathetic. Because it could get scary with all that make-up, and kids have got to watch it. But I approached it as this is a guy that really wants to be invited to the party, but can't admit it to himself."

Carrey, though, has been having a party of his own in recent years. Growing up in Canada under less than ideal monetary conditions, his star has risen to the point that he's a member of the elite club that pulls in $20 million per picture.

"But there hasn't been a big change in my life," he says. "Except for the fact that everybody knows me. That's pretty weird. It makes you self-conscious about sucking your gut in every now and again. But my life is getting simpler and simpler, thanks to a lot of people who remind me that if you lose some of the menial things of life, you lose pride and you lose some joy. There's some innate feeling you get from picking up the room or doing some laundry that makes you feel great. I guess when I first got famous I kind of bought into the idea that you should hire people to do everything, because you can. And I wanted to be Bruce Wayne or something. But I just realized that I've gotta wash my own cape."

"Me, Myself & Irene" opens nationally on June 23.

A Fish in the Pan

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

You like fish but rarely make it home, preferring instead to order it when you eat out. Why? Well, cooking fish at home isn't like grilling a steak. It is easy to overcook, it often sticks to the pan or grill, it is sometimes thick and sometimes thin, and the profusion of varieties is, at best, confusing. So I set out to find a simple, dependable method for cooking a thick fillet quickly and easily.

I decided to stick with a sauté pan since I wanted the simplest possible recipe. I purchased fillets of cod, haddock, talapia, flounder, halibut, and sea bass and preferred the halibut and sea bass since they are both firm and have sufficient flavor to stand up to a simple pan sauce. (The talapia was one of the blandest foods I have ever tasted – they should give this fish away!) I then tested browning the fillets with and without flour. The floured fillets developed a nicer, more even crust and were more resistant to sticking. In terms of the fat, butter burned easily and vegetable oil has little flavor, so I settled on a good olive oil. Two tablespoons was enough to thoroughly coat the bottom of the pan (a 12-inch skillet).

Sautéing (cooking quickly in a hot skillet) the fish in the pan presented a few problems. First, it was hard to properly cook the center without overcooking the outside. Covering the pan made it difficult to brown the fish nicely. I finally decided that a combination of high-heat followed by low-heat, covered cooking would give me both a nice outer crust and perfectly cooked fish. I did find, however, that since all fillets are not created equal (some are thin and some thick) that the actual cooking times varied. Finishing the cooking over low heat with the cover on came in handy, as it provided a longer cooking window during which I could check to see if the fish was done. When cooking over high heat, a few seconds one way or the other makes a big difference.

Now that I had a foolproof method of cooking the fish, I wanted to develop a simple pan sauce. The basic technique is classic. The fish is removed from the sauté pan, garlic, shallots, or onions are quickly sautéed, and then a liquid such as wine or stock is added over high heat to deglaze (scrape up the browned bits on the bottom of the pan). (Other flavorings such as capers, ginger, and soy sauce can be added as well.) In my testing, I preferred shallots to garlic, onion, or leeks. To deglaze the pan, I tried vinegar, water, chicken stock, and white wine, ultimately preferring the latter. (A low-acid vinegar, such as rice wine vinegar, also works nicely with fish if you use just a few tablespoons.) A half-cup of wine was just the right amount. Other flavor ingredients I tested included mustard, capers, olives, and lemon juice, the latter winning me over for being both simple and pleasant. For fresh herbs, thyme was the winner although parsley, chives, and oregano were good as well. I found rosemary and tarragon to be overpowering.

To add a bit of luxury to this dish, I wanted to finish the sauce with butter, a classic French technique. To do this I whisked pieces of cold butter into the hot sauce, off the heat, just before serving. To gain the maximum thickening effect, make sure that the butter is very cold.

QUICK FISH IN A PAN

There are endless variations to this recipe. Try adding small amounts of capers, chopped black olives, soy sauce, fish sauce, grated ginger, toasted sesame oil, minced anchovies, or rice wine vinegar along with the herbs (or use a combination) and omit the butter. If you do not have shallots, you can substitute a smaller amount of garlic.

2 tablespoons olive oil
2 pounds firm white fish fillets such as sea bass or halibut cut into 4 equal portions
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
Flour for coating the fish
2 tablespoons finely chopped shallots or 2 teaspoons minced garlic
1/2 cup white wine
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
2 teaspoons chopped fresh thyme, oregano, chives, or parsley
1/2 teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons cold butter cut into 1/2-inch slices

1. Heat the olive oil in a large (12-inch) skillet (large enough to hold all of the fish in one layer without crowding) over medium heat. (The pan must have a lid.) Meanwhile season the fish fillets with salt and pepper and lightly coat them with flour shaking off any excess. Add the fish to the skillet and cook until golden brown, about 5 minutes. Try not to peek at the fish for at least 4 minutes to allow a crust to form. This will make the turning of the fillets much easier. Turn the fish, cover, and cook for five minutes. Lower the heat to medium-low and cook, covered, for 4-10 minutes more depending on the thickness of the fish. A thick fillet of sea bass takes about 10 minutes, while a 1/2-inch-thick halibut steak cooks in only 4 minutes. The fish is thoroughly cooked when it is firm to the touch, opaque white through to the center, and flakes when poked with a fork. (The fish will continue to cook off the heat, so remove it from the pan just before you think it is done.) When done, remove to a plate, cover, and set aside.

2. Add the shallots or garlic to the pan and cook for about 2 minutes or until softened but not browned. Raise the heat to medium. Add the wine and lemon juice, and, with a spatula, loosen any bits that may be stuck to the bottom of the pan. Add the thyme (or desired herb) and salt and cook until the mixture has reduced and thickened slightly.

3. Remove from the heat and whisk in the butter. The sauce will thicken and become shiny. Taste for seasonings. Serve immediately spooned over the fish fillets. Serves 4

Quincy has the blues leader's then-current Bluesbreakers introduced to the London club scene a 20-year-old guitarist named Eric Clapton, whose electrifying, blues-influenced playing so astonished listeners as to inspire "Clapton is God!" grafitti on London walls.

The future Slowhand was just one of numerous eminent blues/rock players who served apprenticeships of sorts in Mayall's various Bluesbreakers bands during the era. Others included Clapton's soon-to-be bandmate in Cream, singer/bassist Jack Bruce, future Fleetwood Mac founders John McVie, Mick Fleetwood and Peter Green, guitarist and future Rolling Stone Mick Taylor, and drummer Ainsley Dunbar (later of Frank Zappa's band and Journey). More recently, Mayall's band has been launch-pad for current-era blues singer/guitarist Coco Montoya, who enjoys a strong cult following.

In his own right, Mayall as a bandleader has performed a distinct and evolving blues style over the decades, often venturing into jazz-influenced fusion experiments. His best known song (besides the now-classic tracks from the Bluesbreakers — John Mayall with Eric Clapton album, from 1965), is the enthralling harp-solo/scat-vocal showcase "Room To Move," from 1970's all-acoustic The Turning Point LP.

Hajjar said that booking Mayall as headliner would have been unlikely had he not been on a tour-swing through the region during this month (he was at the Pioneer Valley Blues Festival in Northampton on June 17-18). But a chance call to the singer/harpist's agent brought the opportunity about.

"When we made the move to try to get John Mayall as headliner we knew we had to be in a position to raise money with the festival, which is needed to have the buying power for acts of his caliber. But going into our eighth years, we feel now we have the confidence to negotiate at this level."

Joe Hajjar, owner of the Yard Rock blues club in Quincy

"I was calling around, looking into different possibilities. And it turned out (John Mayall) was going to be on tour in the area, he was available and offered to us," Hajjar said. "So we booked him for headliner, and it's causing a lot more buzz around the area than we would have thought. He's still touring regularly and still sounding pretty good. He has a new CD out with his current band, and when you hear it, you'd never know the man is in his mid 60s. Two of our other performers playing at the Festival, James Montgomery and Steve Murphy, are both very excited that he's coming this year."

Murphy & the Yardrockers' set will include a guest performance by Boston-based reggae singer Danny Tucker, who leads an area reggae band. Vive Tribe, that plays a regular last-Thursday-of-the-month date at the Yard Rock. The Yardrockers also host a weekly Saturday-night open blues jam at the Quincy shipyard-neighborhood club, with other local players invited to sit in. Russell as well leads his band in a regular Wednesday-night date at the club.

Along with the music, the COP Fest once again this year offers the usual attractions of the Presidential Juried Art & Photography Show, presented by John Black of Quincy's Presidential Cameras, the New England Aquarium kids-activity tidal pool and a multi-cultural food bazaar. The usual low ticket prices of $12 in advance and $15 at the gate, $2 for children under 16 and free for children under six, also include special discounts. Certain coupons get $3 off at the gate and membership cards with the South ShoreYMCA, Superfitness clubs and the New England Aquarium will fetch $10 ticket prices.

"Our goal has always been to present a show with ticket prices that are affordable for families. And we believe we've always been able to give people a great show at a great price, with top quality acts. The blues is a type of music that truly crosses all age barriers," Hajjar said.

CD shoots for handgun safety

Red Blooded Blues CD (an earlier benefit compilation disc that Stratton worked as a consultant on featuring tracks from blues and R&B artists and raising profits for the American Liver Foundation, the Hepatitis B Campaign and the Blues Heaven Foundation)."

"John (Rosenthal) was really impressed with the blues compilation, my work on the disc and my contacts in the record business and previous work with the various non-profit groups. And it was pretty much he who came up with the first hint of an idea for a benefit disc for the Stop Handgun Violence group, and to promote handgun violence awareness," Stratton said.

Stratton's production consultant work is his other music-biz trade, when not fronting his local cover band, the Intractions with the Happening Horns, a favorite on the area club, festival and corporate function circuit. With the Intractions, Stratton plays keyboards and guitar and also handles vocals on some numbers.

As a production consultant with his home company Stratton Productions, the musician/producer has racked up some impressive credits since 1995. Along with the aforementioned blues disc, there have been two volumes titled Women For Women, all-female artist collections featuring Sheryl Crow, Carly Simon, Carole King, the Indigo Girls and others with proceeds benefitting the National Alliance of Breast Cancer Organization. In 1997, Stratton helped produce Diana: Princess of Wales Tribute, featuring original songs by Paul McCartney, Celine Dion, Rod Stewart, Aretha Franklin and more and benefiting the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund.

The Stop Handgun Violence disc, which should see release in late August, will be no less impressive in regard to artists and material. The planned 16-track set is offering a tasteful blend of new originals by Bonnie Raitt, Paula Cole, Fastball, Santana with Dave Matthews, and Ben Folds Five, and already familiar radio hits like Sheryl Crow's "Anything But Down," Sixpence None the Richer's "Kiss Me" and Sugar Ray's "Some Day." In addition, and in fitting with the overall theme, the disc will include an ensemble, "We Are the World"-type effort featuring Livingston Taylor, Jonathan Edwards, Jon Pousette-Dart, Dr. Hook (of Medicine Show fame), ex-Orleans singer/guitarist John Hall and former J. Geils Band frontman Peter Wolf performing a take on the mid-70s War hit "Why Can't We Be Friends."

"John and I began seriously discussing the possibility of this (SHV CD) project in 1998. Then the next year after the Columbine High School shootings took place, we knew we should really open the network to get some musicians involved," Stratton said.

"During this part of pre-production, one ironic thing was that the first group of artists we called, people like Bonnie Raitt, John Hall, Jackson Browne and Crosby Stills Nash & Young, people who've always been socially active and were involved in the No Nukes concerts twenty years ago, were a bit slower to respond at first than we expected. It was actually the newer generation of musicians who provided the spark. People like Mark McGrath of Sugar Ray, Myles Zuniga of Fastball and Ben Folds were really excited when we called them, they really wanted to be part of the album, and were more accommodating and eager to help. Without them, I can honestly say this project wouldn't have happened. And once the word got out that they were getting involved, we started getting a lot of calls after that," Stratton said.

"We believe that with artist names like we have on this disc, people will sit up and take notice of handgun violence issues. The main things we want to promote with the project are responsibility and awareness of handguns and the issues."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21

The combination of an Aquarius moon and Venus/Mars alignment promises an exciting social day. A lunar alignment to Uranus this morning warns you to expect the unexpected. Be more spontaneous and adaptable; be willing to explore new ideas, new directions. A potential stumbling block is in effect between 5:12-8:12 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn. Don't let doubt, fear or frustration creep in. The remainder of the evening rates high for social activities, romantic encounters.

THURSDAY, JUNE 22

The Aquarius moon becomes inactive at 12:25 a.m. until 3:52 a.m., when a Pisces moon takes over. This Pisces moon forms easy contacts to the sun, Mars and Venus. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Take extra time out for yourself. Through prayer and meditation you can gain new awareness and find deeper meanings in life.

FRIDAY, JUNE 23

Mercury has been slowing its rate of motion this past week and actually begins retrograde travel at 4:32 a.m., 20-degrees of the sign Cancer. Mercury travels in retrograde until July 17. This is a period to take a sabbatical; rest and recharge your batteries, shed emotional baggage, strive for personal fulfillment and inner peace. Today a Pisces moon generates a laid-back mood. Avoid working on projects that require mental precision and attention to details. Get extra rest tonight.

SATURDAY, JUNE 24

This may be a slow-starting morning. Take extra quiet time out for yourself, enjoy favorite leisure activities. The moon continues travel in easygoing Pisces, forming harmonious contacts to Saturn and Jupiter, when it becomes inactive. An Aries moon takes over at 1:55 p.m., bringing an energy boost. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 9:00 p.m. The moon decreases in light until next Saturday, when a Solar Eclipse/new moon occurs.

SUNDAY, JUNE 25

This is not a typical lazy Sunday. An Aries moon sets a quick pace. Plan to channel high energy constructively. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way in short time. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. Get back in the swing of favorite sports, exercise programs.

MONDAY, JUNE 26

It may be difficult to get back to business today. Others may be impatient, argumentative, irritable. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. At 3:23 a.m. the Aries moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive until 8:19 p.m. Stay busy with projects that need a finishing touch; handle routine chores and errands. A Taurus moon takes over at 8:19 p.m. Plan a quiet evening.

TUESDAY, JUNE 27

Allow extra time to get where you are going this morning. A lunar alignment to dreamy Neptune may generate delays, unexpected distractions. Things may not go as planned. However, this influence passes over by midmorning, and the remainder of the day rates high across the board. The moon travels in Taurus, forming a harmonious contact to its ruler, Venus, at 3:06 p.m. Do something that brings beauty into your life or someone else's today. All creative endeavors get the green light. Enjoy a romantic evening with the love in your life.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. The moon continues its travel in practical Taurus. A rough spot is in effect between 5:04-8:04 a.m. when the moon aligns with Uranus and may disrupt the flow of the morning. However, the remainder of the day rates high for productivity. Keep your nose to the grindstone. At 10:34 p.m. the Taurus moon aligns with Jupiter and becomes inactive. A Gemini moon takes over at 10:59 p.m.

A concert ticket too high?

By Ken Capobianco
GNC ARTS WRITER

Consider the cold hard facts. The Tweeter Center has a host of shows this summer with a top ticket price of more than $60. Face it, that's a lot of cheddar for anyone who likes to see more than one concert out at the sheds. But anyone planning to see their favorite performer should be forewarned. KISS, those paragons of working-class Detroit rockers, are charging $80.50. Sting, despite having his tour subsidized by Compaq Computers, is commanding $80.75. Jimmy Page and the Black Crowes top off at $88.50. The Who's high price is $150.

At the FleetBoston Pavilion, Don Henley just headlined with a $89.50 top ticket while Nina Simone's was $64.50. If you want to go to the Metal Fest at Foxboro with Metallica and Korn, you have to cough up $65. Tina Turner charged $88.25 last week for the FleetCenter and Ricky Martin sold out the Fleet with a $95 ducat. And the season's supreme ticket price goes to Diana Ross' reunion with (some of) her old mates at a whopping $250 for their gig at the FleetCenter.

In addition, many venues are asking for a maintenance fee, while the ticket middle men like Ticket Master charge a handling and mailing fee. That all adds at least $15 on top of the original ticket price.

Stop, in the name of sanity.

So who's to blame? Are conniving promoters stuffing their coffers, or are the artists trying to make as much money as they can now to save up for the day when they don't wield the same kind of clout?

"Most people think there is this large conspiracy between promoters, but that's not at all the issue here," says Gary Bongiovanni, editor in chief of Poll Star magazine, an industry trade publication that monitors the touring business. "The prices are a direct reflection of what the artist wants to make. The artists along with promoters can pretty much gauge what the demand for the tour will be and set prices accordingly. But in the cases of the higher-end tickets, all of those are directly set by the artists.

"Whether or not they are getting what they are demanding is another question, but as you will see, a lot of people are indeed paying the premium ticket prices so they can sit close to the artist and for a lot of people; it's a one-shot deal, so they pay it. They may not go to another show all year, so it's worth it to them."

What kind of gross receipts are we talking about? Consider a recent KISS concert with Ted Nugent and Skid Row at the Deer Creek Music Center in Indiana. The top ticket for the 24,000-seat arena was $79 with lesser tickets going for $54 and $39. It adds up to a $1,030,697 payday for the three acts. A recent Tina Turner concert at the Kiel Center in St. Louis saw a top ticket of $79.25 with cheaper seats running $55.25 and $35.25. Turner filled only 15,147 of the 20,226-capacity arena and still came away with a shade over $900,000.

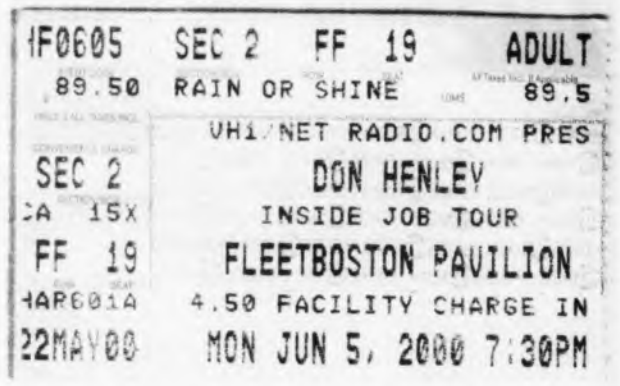
One of the reasons that ticket prices have skyrocketed over the last few years is a result of the artists recognizing that there are a lot of fans who will pay top dollar to sit close and feel a part of the action. In the past, it was the scalpers who would demand the big money for premium seats. In recent years, both John Mellencamp and Neil Young played the Orpheum Theater and charged $150 per ticket for a select number of seats in the front few rows. The artists wised up and cut the scalpers' legs off by charging the exorbitant fee themselves. Instead of having some of the revenue go to illegal scalping and ticketing agencies, the performers now cash in and get top dollar themselves.

Not every band out there this summer is charging the obscene prices. A group like Pearl Jam, with an avid following, could easily have commanded a $100 ticket, but seats to their Tweeter Center performances in August were priced $35.50 and $31.50. The Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Foo Fighters, one of the best double bills of the summer, are only commanding $40.50 and $30.50. Lou Reed and Victoria Williams have set tickets at $37 and $32 for their show at the FleetBoston Pavilion in June.

"All of those acts could have charged a lot more and gotten it," says Bongiovanni. "But they realize that they have a younger audience and they're price sensitive. They understand that their audience also may not have the kind of money that a baby boom audience that goes to see a Sting or a Don Henley has, so they rein in the price. And it makes sense. They want to play to as many people as possible, and that's a way of assuring it while keeping the tour financially viable. They won't make a killing, but they will do well enough."

Will these already exorbitant ticket prices continue to rise? Well, to quote those classic rockers Bachman Turner Overdrive, "you ain't seen nothing yet."

"Don't expect prices to go down," says Bongiovanni. "Just as you see in any other types of entertainment, once they pass a threshold, they never go back. Expect increases throughout the rest of this year, especially at arena shows, and you'll see it continue next summer. It's the way the business is run these days."



Don Henley had one of the steepest concert ticket price for his performance at the FleetBoston Pavilion

originally aired during the 1950s and 1960s but she said Winfrey's new network is trying to re-invent the show. Baker said being on the show was a thrill.

"There were different guests who came on with different objects," Baker said. "The panel was supposed to guess what each of those objects were through a series of simple questions. The objective of the game is for the panelists to basically guess the secrets the guests present."

Baker said she never had any plans to go to Hollywood or any special desire to be on the game show. But it was the Pilgrim Hall website which got Baker on the program. Baker manages the hall's webssite and executives of Winfrey's net network discovered her through the site.

"Executives of the (Oxygen) network found Pilgrim Hall on the Internet," Baker said. "Our website is really nifty. It has tons of information an a lot of neat graphics. Anyway, the people from the station called me and told me they were putting together a Thanksgiving show."

Baker said the executives told her about the premise of the game show and asked her if it would be possible to transport something as delicate as a 17th century artifact.

"It wasn't a problem," Baker said, "but it required some preparation. I had to have a special custom carrying case made for it. And I couldn't take something really big with me."

But Baker said figuring out which artifact to bring was the only dilemma. All her other worries were taken care of by the Oxygen Network.

Baker was flown into Hollywood courtesy of the network, and she was also flown back to Massachusetts at their expense. While she was in California, the network paid for her hotel, and gave her some extra funds as well so she could do some exploring in her spare time. In addition, Baker was treated to constant limousine service while she was there, as she was chauffeured back and forth from the TV studio.

"Whenever I go to the airport, I always see these limousine drivers holding signs with people's names on them," Baker said. "When I got off the plane in California, one of them was holding a sign with my name on it, and I got really excited, because I felt like I was getting the red carpet treatment. It was like an out of body experience."

When Baker got to the TV studio to record the show, she said she was brought in by the network executives and she was told by them what was going to happen. She said she went over all of her responses ready for the show, and she was also taken through a "dry run" of the show before it was actually taped. She said the actual taping of her segment only lasted about eight minutes.

"There were about 100 people in the audience watching us," Baker said. "It was an entirely different world for me. I wasn't really nervous, because when I first walked into the set area, there was so much going on. What surprised me was how short the personalities like Teri Garr were in person."

Baker said when one of the three panelists guessed what her object was, she pulled it out of her special carrying case and people in the audience were amazed.

"When I pulled the object out, there was instantaneous awe in the room. That was wonderful. Those of us who live around here are so used to the history in this part of the country, but these people were just shocked by what I had. The object I brought made the stories of the Pilgrims real to these people."

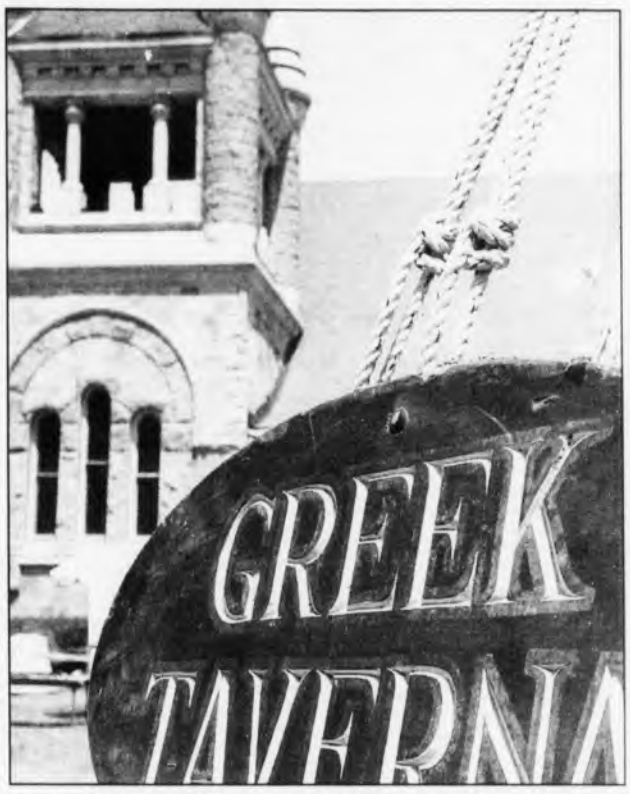
GREECE IS THE WORD

Taverna is back in town

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER



Greek color, culture and cuisine come to Cohasset, Satruday as the Natvity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Church hosts its 20th annual Taverna.

The Greek festival open to the public will take place rain or shine in the front yard of the Jerusalem Road church. All proceeds from the event will go toward a church-operated fund to buy a new community center near Nativity-Assumption.

According to Rev. John Meheras, the church's pastor, in Greek, Taverna means café.

"And that's just what the whole event is," he said. "A big cafe with music, food, and other activities."

"It's the largest Greek festival in southeastern Massachusetts," added festival coordinator and Nativity-Assumption member Greg Bukuras.

The festival begin on Friday, June 23 at 1 p.m. and will continue until 9 p.m. that night. The festival will be open Saturday from 12 p.m. until 9 p.m. and then on Sunday from 12 p.m. until 7 p.m.. Admission is free.

"The purpose of the festival is to share our Greek culture and heritage with the people on the South Shore community," Maheras said. "Through it, people will get a feel of Greek customs including Greek music and food."

There will be a wealth of activities reflecting Greek culture during the weekend festival.

A number of dance groups will be performing throughout the weekend at the event, including a high school dance troupe from Greece.

In addition, the renown Greek singer/songwriter Dimitrios Zachos will perform.

"(Zachos) is an extremely talented man and he is well respected in Greece," Maheras said. "He is a composer and a writer and he is really considered the dean of Greek music. I remember listening to his music when I was a kid."

One of the main features of the festival will surely be the food, Maheras said. Featured delicacies will include Greek specialties like grape leaves, Kalamata olives, feta cheese with fresh tomatoes, roasted leg of lamb, Souvlaki, Mousaka, Loukoumades, Diples, Kadaifi, and Gyros (grinders).

As Maheras says, "Maybe you can't pronounce it, but you'll love it."

Maheras added a pastry shop will be set up for desserts, and in addition, there will be a Greek coffee house set up in back of the church where event-goers can sit, take in the beautiful view, and relax with an after dinner cup of coffee.

"That's what many Greek people do," Maheras said. "They have coffee and enjoy their atmosphere. Our cafe will be set up along the water so people will be able to watch the ducks and look at the rest of the scenery."

Bukuras said most of the food at the festival was prepared by church-member Harry Athanisou, a remarkable feat in itself.

"(Athanisou) prepared about 80 pans of food," Bukuras said. "Each of the pans weighs about 30 pounds. That's a lot of food. He did it all himself, and I think he probably had the hardest job out of anyone."

Bukuras said other members of the church helped make pastries, and he added there were about 60 volunteers who took on tasks so that the festival will function smoothly.

"Everything at the festival is run by the people of the parish who really don't do this kind of thing as a profession," Bukuras added. "It's just a labor of love for them, but they donate a great deal of their time."

Another person Bukuras mentioned was Helena Panesis, who will be, and has been running the festival's raffle for the past 20 years.

"She's amazing," Bukuras said. "You definitely wouldn't think she's in her 80s with all the running around she does at the festival."

FILE PHOTOS

Visitors to last year's Taverna included state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset. In addition to delicious Greek cuisine and live entertainment festival-goers can check out jewelry and other wares for sale during the weekend-long event.

Bukuras added that Panesis was also once the secretary for Eleanor Roosevelt.

Aside from the dancing, music, food, and raffles, there will also be a vendor of Greek jewelry and other Greek items. There will also be special activities for children happening where prizes will be given out.

"Last year was a big year for the festival," said the event's publicity manager Mark Casper. "But I'm sure this is the year we'll set the record. I think the people who came last year will definitely be back. It's just a large, authentic, cultural experience."

Bukuras said the festival draws a lot of people from Cohasset, but it also draws people from Hull, Hingham, and towns as far as Watertown and Worcester.

"I think it's the food and the family atmosphere that prevails and seems inviting to people," Maheras said. "We are giving a good product at a reasonable price. We have good healthy meals here as well as friendly people. I think this festival is a great way for us to present our heritage to others."

Relief for disaster prone areas

Project Impact helps communities prepare for storms

By Marilyn Jackson

Last year, FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency), spent nearly $3 billion to help residents and business owners recover from hurricanes, floods, tornadoes, earthquakes and fires, while the total for the 1990s topped $25 billion. And that doesn't include the billions more that insurance firms paid out in claims for repairs and rebuilding.

More difficult to quantify are the dollars that businesses lost in income and workers lost in wages, if not in jobs. In recent years, Southeastern Massachusetts has escaped the worst of the storms, yet for those who have weathered hurricanes or nor'easters in the past, they are mindful of the wrath Mother Nature can inflict. And with hurricane season upon us, FEMA is launching a renewed effort to publicize how cities and towns and individuals can take preventive actions to reduce damage from natural disasters.

Three years ago, FEMA launched Project Impact, a program that includes buyouts and relocations to cut down disaster risks, similar to the buyouts which followed the 1991 No Name Storm which hit the New England coast, plus a major educational component to help communities become more disaster resistant. It's a common-sense approach, based on three principles:

Local governments must determine what preventive measures it will take.

The business community, the private sector, must participate.

Long-term investment in time and money is essential.

Marshfield was the first community in Massachusetts to become a Project Impact community. Later, Quincy received the designation, and last year, the Upper Mystic River Basin, which includes nine Middlesex County communities, received a similar designation.

Presently, there are about 200 communities nationwide participating in the initiative. FEMA provides technical assistance and some financial help to these communities to become disaster resistant. For every dollar spent in these prevention efforts, FEMA estimates two dollars are saved in repairs.

"The idea behind Project Impact is to become as disaster resistant as possible," said Paul Ford, Project Impact coordinator for Region I of FEMA. For Marshfield, that has meant focusing not only on flood proofing and elevation for flood-prone residential structures but on evacuation routes as well, especially in Brant Rock, because those areas too can become flooded, hindering escape.

"Marshfield overwhelmingly was selected for Project Impact because of the work we already had done," said Scott Wellington of the coastal advisory committee. Under one grant program, H.E.L.P., the town has funneled funds to homeowners who have had repetitive losses to fix up their homes, such as raising them on pilings or moving things out of the cellar, like electrical systems, hot water heaters or even furnaces, he explained.

Altogether "a dozen or two houses" have been retrofitted in Brant Rock, Green Harbor, along Foster Avenue," Wellington estimated." Joan Foster is the CEO of Project Impact, helping find matching funds to further the program, which was "designed by us and implemented by us," said Wellington.

Coastal areas like this one in Scituate are vulnerable to hurricanes and northeasters. The federal government has initiated disaster relief programs to help beleaguered homeowners.

"The contract itself was drawn up with the help of town counsel and then supervised by Bob Wiley," the building inspector. Project Impact also encourages the participation of the business community, said Foster, citing several partners, including Scituate Federal Savings Bank, John Foster Lumber, Taylor Lumber and the Plymouth County Animal Hospital, which will accept pets during a disaster and help find other sites which will board the animals.

In addition to addressing the needs of homeowners, the town focused on improving its infrastructure in the Brant Rock business community, which is not only subject to flooding from the ocean but from the marshland to the west as well. As a result, two tide gates will be replaced and a storage area for up to a million gallons of floodwaters will be created which release those waters after the high tides recede. Old drainage ditches in Rexhame will be retrofitted as well, said Foster, as larger pipes will channel floodwaters under Route 139 to marshland behind the Marshfield Airport. The engineering work is nearly complete for these projects, she said.

Quincy, also vulnerable to nor'easters, had begun several public works projects to lessen flooding problems before it was chosen a Project Impact community. Those contracts included rebuilding seawalls along Wollaston Beach, Squantum and Houghs Neck, building dikes in Montclair, undertaking flood prevention measures along Hayward Creek and constructing tunnels to relieve flooding from Town Brook.

"Prior to Project Impact, we had received a hazard mitigation grant from FEMA, and we designed a program that combined Community Block Development Grant Funds with the hazard mitigation funds and private sector money to fund projects," said Angelito Santos of the city's building department.

"In each case, low and moderate-income persons would be provided certain assistance, but with FEMA, they didn't care what the income level was. They had set a standard assistance, 75 percent of the cost of related flood [mitigation] work.

"When Project Impact came around as the hazardous mitigation funds were winding down, we carried over all the projects," he said. One commercial building which has benefited from Project Impact is the CVS store on Sea Street which relocated its heating system to a higher area in its building. Santos said the city decided CVS would be an appropriate recipient as CVS is a Project Impact partner nationally, just as are Bell Atlantic, Home Depot, Compaq Computer, Associated Builders and Contractors and others.

At some point, CVS will be called upon in Quincy, he said. "It's a good message to send." "One of the first things to do [for any community] is develop a hazard mitigation plan," said Ford of Project Impact. "If a community has a plan in place, which has identified all the risks - the locations that are highly vulnerable - and mapped out a plan to mitigate or reduce a particular exposure, that makes any funding easier to funnel to the community."

Each state determines the criteria for designation as a Project Impact community. "It's a competitive process," he said. "In 1997 the agency decided to adopt this initiative which would be more proactive, than reactive, and could minimize damage," he said.

"Seven pilot communities were selected the first year, and in 1998, the program was offered to all 50 states." Ford singled out both Doris Crary, who is chairman of Marshfield's coastal advisory committee, and Joan Foster as being instrumental in getting those towns involved in the National Flood Insurance Program, helping homeowners obtain flood insurance at lower rates.

"They are still at risk, but we're not in the business of telling them what to do," he said. Under the hazardous mitigation grant program, where FEMA offers money to communities through the state, homeowners can retrofit, such as elevate their utilities or even elevate structures.

The buyout program, he explained, is offered to property owners who sustain repetitive damage. FEMA conducts a cost-benefit analysis, and properties that have been 100 percent destroyed are offered the buyout; properties destroyed 50 percent must be elevated if they are rebuilt, he said.

Up to $300,000 is available to each community, but that's seed money to become more disaster resistant, said Ford. The goal is to encourage partnerships with local banks and hardware stores and insurance companies to promote disaster resistance.

The benefits of being designated a Project Impact community are not immediately tangible, added Cris McCombs, Massachusetts manger of disaster recovery. "We look at the vulnerability to multiple hazards in a coastal community or inland, and their participation in the community ratings system...Then we look at the infrastructure, not the bricks and mortar but the community itself. Is it well organized, working with businesses? Do they have a better vested interest in making it disaster resistant? Do the chamber of commerce, local industry and citizen advisory groups work together and help with the decision-making?"

When Hurricane Floyd last September struck the mainland, forcing hundreds of thousands to evacuate from Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas as well as Virginia and New Jersey, folks in New England began boarding up their properties and taking other preventive measures, preparing for the worst. Fortunately, Floyd lost its strength

HURRICANES 9

Name that hurricane

Hurricane season officially began June 1, and NOAA (National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration) scientists are forecasting an above average hurricane season - perhaps 11 tropical storms, seven which turn into hurricanes and three classified as a major or Category 3 hurricane, with sustained winds exceeding 110 miles an hour.

Warmer-than-normal temperatures in the Atlantic Ocean and the waning phenomenon of La Niña, with cooler-than-average surface temperatures in the eastern and central tropical Pacific, contribute to the likelihood of more storms than usual, according to NOAA Administrator D. James Baker.

Peak season for hurricanes is between August and October. While hurricanes threaten coastal areas and the Caribbean Islands, land-falling storms can produce devastating inland flooding like Hurricane Floyd last year.

"The greatest potential for loss of life from a hurricane remains storm surge," says Max Mayfield, NOAA's new director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

"When an evacuation order is given, it should be treated as a life or death matter," he said. "Hide from the wind and flee from the flood," he advises.

NOAA's names for this year's Atlantic storms are:

Alberto, Beryl, Chris, Debby , Ernesto, Florence, Gordon, Helene, Isaac, Joyce, Keith, Leslie, Michael, Nadine, Oscar , Patty, Rafael, Sandy, Tony, Valerie, William

Success of FHA programs helps first-timers achieve the American Dream

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT

In a recent report, an official of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development presented an impressive picture of the turnaround of the Federal Housing Administration's mortgage loan programs. "FHA is one of the federal government's real success stories," said Assistant Secretary for Housing William Apgar. "Since 1934, FHA has helped nearly 30 million American families to become homeowners. We do this by insuring home mortgages, providing valuable credit enhancement that encourages private lenders to make home loans they otherwise would deem too risky."

The program has been largely successful, but about 10 years ago it was in financial decline.

"Despite a six-decade history of providing access to mortgage capital in good times and in bad — by the early 1990s, the FHA was broke," Apgar continued. Yet, after radical restructuring under the leadership of Secretary Andrew Cuomo, the program "is projected to contribute nearly $20 billion to the national budget surplus."

The FHA was created by the National Housing Act of 1934, which was designed to help the real estate market recover from the Great Depression. It did this by establishing a federally sponsored insurance fund to provide a safety net in case a loan went into default. This allowed customers with less than a 20 percent downpayment to purchase a home.

Since that time, the FHA has provided the framework for a true national mortgage market that led to the creation of the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Association (Freddie Mac). These two agencies form the secondary mortgage market by purchasing loans from lenders, freeing up cash for the banks to make more loans.

FHA's 3-percent downpayment and flexible qualifying standards set it apart from most conventional loans, but its special edge is that it allows 100 percent of all money in the transaction to come from a gift. Many first-time buyers today have difficulty raising the necessary money for a downpayment and closing costs. With the FHA, as long as the buyers qualify for the monthly payment, the required investment may come from a gift from a relative or a grant from a public agency. FHA reports that so far this year, 82 percent of all loans insured by the agency were for first-time buyers. Some of that success can be attributed to the increase in the FHA's maximum loan limits that occurred earlier in the year. Buyers in Massachusetts can now borrow up to $218,500 for a single-family home in Bristol, Plymouth, Suffolk, Norfolk, Essex, Middlesex and Worcester counties. The limit for multi-family homes are $246,000 for a two-family house, $299,000 for three-families and $345,000 for four-unit properties.

During the past several years, the FHA program has acted more like a privately run firm in the way the agency has balanced budgets, cut waste and fine-tuned and added products. The FHA program's success benefits all U.S. citizens not only because of the expanded housing opportunities, but also from the agency's financial contribution to our economy.

Carol Bulman is president of Norwell-based Conway Financial Services, a mortgage brokerage firm owned by Jack Conway & Co. that maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of the top lenders in the East and originates a full line of mortgage products. Relief for disaster prone areas by the time it passed through Massachusetts, downgraded to a tropical storm, and this area was spared its destructive forces.

"The threat already is out there, and it's not a matter of if, but when," said McCombs. To promote hurricane awareness, said Tom Rodger, area director of emergency management for southeastern Massachusetts, he is coordinating a public, family-oriented program from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday, July 18, at Cape Cod Community College's Tilden Arts Center on Route 132 in West Barnstable.

"Lots of young people never have experienced a hurricane, or they think that Hurricane Bob was not that bad. There are more severe hurricanes, especially in the '50s, with Diane and Donna. And in the 1938 hurricane, there were a lot of deaths," said Rodger.

What to do in a hurricane

During a hurricane, FEMA advises people to remain indoors, staying on the side of the house opposite the direction of the wind. Move as the wind shifts, and stay away from windows and glass doors.

If evacuation is necessary, leave as quickly as possible, lock the house, and watch out for flooded roads and bridges.

Bring pre-assembled emergency supplies, such as clothing, blankets or sleeping bags.

Take your pets. Leaving them behind can be dangerous, but most emergency shelters will not allow animals.

Pre-assembled emergency supplies should meet family needs for three days. That should include enough water and food that won't spoil; a change of clothing and footwear and bedding for each person; a first aid kit with family prescription medicines; emergency tools such as a flashlight with extra batteries and a battery-powered radio; an extra set of car keys, a credit card, cash and traveler's checks; sanitation supplies, and special items for infant and elderly family members.

Keep the car filled with gasoline, as pumps will not work without electricity, just as ATM machines will be inoperable.

Thanks, Ellie ...
"We recently purchased property in Rockland and used the services of Ellie Curreri of the Jack Conway Scituate Harbor Office. Everything worked out just perfectly. The reason we came to Conway was that the company had always maintained a high quality of customer service in the real estate industry and it is known to most of the people who live in this part of the state. Ellie was particularly helpful and if I had to rate her, I would say 'above average, way above'. We were satisfied way beyond any of our expectations and the help that Ellie got from her manager, Mary Pecce, was also well coordinated and appreciated. Several members of our family have also been happily served by the Jack Conway Co. and I guess that is because the Jack Conway service has always been AAA. It is hard to improve upon perfection. Many thanks."

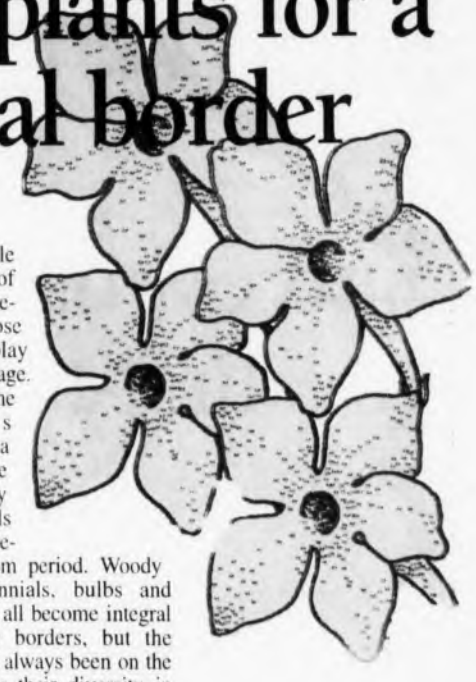
Selecting plants for a perennial border



By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A dazzling display of Kousa dogwood (Cornus kousa) blossoms appears around every bend in the road as I travel about our South Shore communities this week. Many homeowners have obviously discovered the beauty, ease of culture, and reliability of this handsome ornamental tree. Blooming several weeks later than its native American counterpart, its sparkling white, star-like flower bracts have completely smothered the foliage this season. Attractive red fruits which resemble raspberries or cherries will appear in autumn and are favored by wildlife during the winter months.

Green thumbs up

Nearly 25 years ago, a small specimen of this attractive ornamental was placed off the corner of our home as part of our foundation planting. Overgrown hemlocks, rhododendrons and yews have since been removed and this lovely tree was temporarily uprooted at a most inopportune time several years ago to enable the construction of an addition to our home, but its recovery has been remarkable and the prolific blooms this season are truly a joy to behold. It has become the cornerstone of my most recent perennial border in conjunction with several other woody ornamentals which provide structure and permanence, the so-called bones of the garden.

Years of experience with perennials have made the designing of new perennial borders somewhat less challenging in recent years. Despite a perpetual love affair with nearly all perennials, practice has taught me that certain plants will simply not survive in my heavier soil, even when well-prepared, and that some exuberant, aggressive plants are best avoided. Most importantly, I have learned to select perennials which offer multiple seasons of interest, especially those which display attractive foliage. I consider the blossoms merely a bonus, since the majority of perennials have a relatively brief bloom period. Woody plants, perennials, bulbs and annuals have all become integral parts of my borders, but the emphasis has always been on the perennials for their diversity in form, texture and color as well as their permanence from season to season.

Once an appropriate site has been selected, preferably one which can be viewed from within your home, the size, shape and style determined, and the soil properly prepared, the most enjoyable stage of designing a garden awaits, the selection of the plants. Observations, noting the quantity of light which reaches each part of the garden throughout the day, should be made to ensure selection of plants which are suitable for your garden's location.

Many gardeners remark that their gardens are spectacular in May and June only to become a sea of green foliage for the duration of the growing season. This is most likely due to the fact that most passionate gardeners are impulse buyers.

The greatest challenge with designing a perennial border is to create the illusion that the entire garden is constantly in bloom when, in reality, only limited numbers of plants are blooming at any given time. The most successful borders provide a progression of bloom from spring through fall and rely on the effective use of key design principles, especially repetition and contrast. Repetition of color, form and texture will cause the eye to be drawn along the border creating rhythm; contrasts in color, form and texture create a more interesting, diversified design.

Many gardeners remark that their gardens are spectacular in May and June only to become a sea of green foliage for the duration of the growing season. This is most likely due to the fact that most passionate gardeners are impulse buyers. We travel from nursery to nursery in the spring gathering perennials which appeal to us, often based on the blooms we observe at the time. Many worthy perennial plants are ignored, especially those which bloom later in the season, because they are not in flower. A few hours of research and planning will produce a significantly more attractive design and will most likely save money in the long run. Impulse buying may be more fun, but often leads to long walks around the yard looking for a suitable location to plant your new acquisitions; many plants may be squeezed into less than ideal conditions, resulting in their ultimate demise.

As you browse through books, catalogs and nurseries, begin compiling a list of plants which appeal to you making note of their bloom season, color (both flower and foliage), form (prostrate, mounded, spiked) and textural qualities (dull, shiny, ferny). Sometimes the easiest approach is a month by month listing based on bloom season. In sunny borders, flowers can be considered a primary focus of the design layout. In shady gardens, plant forms and foliage color and texture tend to become dominant features.

In addition to reference materials, take advantage of garden tours to get ideas and observe plants growing in established gardens. Plants growing in containers at the nursery rarely give you a realistic view of the plant's potential. Take photos, bring along a notebook and ask questions. Gardeners love to share information.

Join the Hanover Garden Club June 23 and 24 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. for a house and garden tour at 10 locations in Hanover. Tickets are available in advance for $16 at Culhane's Card Shoppe or the John Curtis Library or for $20 on the day of the tour at 662 Main St. or 947 Broadway. "We were selling our property on Plain St., and decided to contact Mani Barrett of the Jack Conway Marshfield office because she had been highly recommended by several friends of ours. The faith we put in Mani was certainly returned to us one hundred fold, as she priced the property correctly, did an excellent job preparing a marketing plan and handled all of the showings with skill. The end result was that Damian Grozier, from the Jack Conway Cohasset office, became interested in the property and brought over a buyer. Great team work on the part of Mani, Damian and the Jack Conway Company."

Love's Labour's Lost (A-)

Purists will hate it; they always do. But it's not as if Kenneth Branagh can't do Shakespeare straight — he showed his stuff in "Henry V" and "Hamlet" — but rather that he enjoys the occasional lighter touch, as in "Much Ado About Nothing." Here, in a foot-tappingly engaging trifle, the director-screenwriter-actor has taken one of the Bard's earliest, and lesser, works, transposed it to a kingdom of Navarre in 1939 Europe and engulfed the silly story in a 1930s-style musical, with the spoken dialogue pure Shakespeare, the music pure Gershwin, Berlin, Kern and Porter. How can it miss?

It can't, and doesn't, and pooh to the stuffed shirts who'll cavil that the truncating is a desecration. In fact — heresy coming, so duck if you must — Shakespeare is almost always truncated in productions, Branagh's "Hamlet" being a rare exception of that great play coming to us, onscreen, with every word intact. And students of the dance will grumble, fairly enough, that with the exception of Adrian Lester, who is a professional dancer as well as an actor, none of the performers is exactly Twinkle Toes on his feet, and the singing is a tad rough as well. So it's more energy than high craft, but the energy is contagious.

The story is of the king of Navarre (Alessandro Nivola) and his three best friends (Branagh, Lester and Matthew Lillard), agreeing to swear off women for three years while they study philosophy and commune with higher things. But they're confronted and tempted by the arrival of the princess of France (Alicia Silverstone) and her ladies-in-waiting (Emily Mortimer, Natascha McElhone, Carmen Ejogo). There are also comic characters brought engagingly and oversizedly to life by Nathan Lane and Timothy Spall, a little subplot floating around at the edges, and a chastened ending when the gentlemen go off to war, portrayed here with newsreel footage of WWII. There are awkwardnesses, as when Lester, who is black, is supposedly unrecognized in disguise and, as John Simon reminds us, is addressed thusly: "You may look pale." No, he may not.

Speaking of colors, in only the rarest of 1930s musicals would there be prominent non-white characters, but if there were, they would be matched. Here, the black woman is drawn to a white man and the black man is drawn to a white woman. It works, perhaps functioning as a kind of in-your-face gesture, but it works, which is the important thing. The production numbers are sumptuous, with an old standby like "There's No Business Like Show Business" given voice to by Lane, who croons rather than belts it out. You haven't seen an Esther Williams type water ballet in a while, you say? There's one for you here. Fred and Ginger and Gene Kelly are all given unspoken homage by the dance routines, and if Shakespeare is twirling in his grave, he may be doing so to "I've Got a Crush on You" or to "I Won't Dance." The playwright won't, but you'll feel like doing so.

Use Philadelphia as base for amusement parks

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Ask George

Q: I'd like to visit three amusement parks in Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Dorney Park, Hershey Park and Six Flags. Where should I start my trip, or what city would be good as a base of operations?

A: Dorney Park is in Allentown, Pa.; Hershey Park is in Hershey, Pa.; and Six Flags Great Adventure is in Jackson, N.J. One option is to fly into Harrisburg, Pa., which is 12 miles from Hershey, and work your way east to Allentown and then to Jackson. You could also use Philadelphia as your base of operations, since Hershey is about two hours west and Allentown about an hour and 15 minutes west of Philadelphia, and Six Flags is an easy 45-minute drive east from there, as well.

Q: I was staying in a hotel recently and noticed they were offering to sell the mattress (a new one, not the actual one I was sleeping on) and other things to their guests. The mattress was very comfortable, but I couldn't decide if it was a good deal or not. Any advice?

A: Buying a mattress can be even more annoying and confusing than buying a new car, since each retailer has different model names for the same mattress, making comparison shopping impossible. Plus, some retailers use bait-and-switch or high-pressure sales techniques. Several hotels, including the Four Seasons chain, have begun selling mattress sets to customers by popular demand. In general, these are indeed good buys since they're offered at wholesale prices.

New York's Palace Hotel sells its mattresses, which are Sealy Posturepedic plush tops, for $599 per set, queen size, or $699, king size (call Contract Furniture Supply at 860-767-4483 for an order form). Since these mattresses are just one grade below Sealy's top-of-the-line Crown Jewel model, which usually costs more than $1,000, I'd say this is a great deal. The only downside: delivery takes about three weeks.

Q: We're visiting Miami and would like to make a side trip to Key West. Do you recommend driving or flying?

A: Probably the cheapest and most relaxing way is to take the bus. Greyhound offers service three times a day (four times on Friday and Sunday) directly to and from Miami International Airport, Concourse E, lower level, and also connects with the Amtrak station in Miami and other downtown Miami locations. The trip takes four hours and 15 minutes and costs $30 one way, slightly higher on weekends and holidays. For information, visit: http://keysshuttle.com or call (305) 296-9072 or (800) 410-KEYS.

Q: Thanks to your information, I used Council Travel last summer to book a flight to Indonesia. This summer I will be returning to Indonesia in late July. Council Travel is holding one possible flight, but it is "the flight from hell." Unfortunately I have lost the list of other reputable consolidators you recommended. Could you please reprint them, particularly any that specialize in Asian travel.

A: A good bet would be CMM at (800) 458-6663. They sell mostly through travel agents, but they'll quote you a price on the phone and they're affiliated with Japan Airlines so you can be sure they're legitimate. They quoted me a price of $950 RT midweek from JFK to Jakarta in mid-July. I checked on travelocity.com for the same dates and got a fare of $3,300 RT, so this is a bargain. You might also try your luck with a travel auction site. Here is my list of some other reliable consolidators. For future reference, you can find this list online at http://home.digitalcity.com/newyork/travel/tips.dci and then click on "Airfare Consolidators." Love's Labour's Lost (A-)

Purists will hate it; they always do. But it's not as if Kenneth Branagh can't do Shakespeare straight — he showed his stuff in "Henry V" and "Hamlet" — but rather that he enjoys the occasional lighter touch, as in "Much Ado About Nothing." Here, in a foot-tappingly engaging trifle, the director-screenwriter-actor has taken one of the Bard's earliest, and lesser, works, transposed it to a kingdom of Navarre in 1939 Europe and engulfed the silly story in a 1930s-style musical, with the spoken dialogue pure Shakespeare, the music pure Gershwin, Berlin, Kern and Porter. How can it miss?

It can't, and doesn't, and pooh to the stuffed shirts who'll cavil that the truncating is a desecration. In fact — heresy coming, so duck if you must — Shakespeare is almost always truncated in productions, Branagh's "Hamlet" being a rare exception of that great play coming to us, onscreen, with every word intact. And students of the dance will grumble, fairly enough, that with the exception of Adrian Lester, who is a professional dancer as well as an actor, none of the performers is exactly Twinkle Toes on his feet, and the singing is a tad rough as well. So it's more energy than high craft, but the energy is contagious.

The story is of the king of Navarre (Alessandro Nivola) and his three best friends (Branagh, Lester and Matthew Lillard), agreeing to swear off women for three years while they study philosophy and commune with higher things. But they're confronted and tempted by the arrival of the princess of France (Alicia Silverstone) and her ladies-in-waiting (Emily Mortimer, Natascha McElhone, Carmen Ejogo). There are also comic characters brought engagingly and oversizedly to life by Nathan Lane and Timothy Spall, a little subplot floating around at the edges, and a chastened ending when the gentlemen go off to war, portrayed here with newsreel footage of WWII. There are awkwardnesses, as when Lester, who is black, is supposedly unrecognized in disguise and, as John Simon reminds us, is addressed thusly: "You may look pale." No, he may not.

Speaking of colors, in only the rarest of 1930s musicals would there be prominent non-white characters, but if there were, they would be matched. Here, the black woman is drawn to a white man and the black man is drawn to a white woman. It works, perhaps functioning as a kind of in-your-face gesture, but it works, which is the important thing. The production numbers are sumptuous, with an old standby like "There's No Business Like Show Business" given voice to by Lane, who croons rather than belts it out. You haven't seen an Esther Williams type water ballet in a while, you say? There's one for you here. Fred and Ginger and Gene Kelly are all given unspoken homage by the dance routines, and if Shakespeare is twirling in his grave, he may be doing so to "I've Got a Crush on You" or to "I Won't Dance." The playwright won't, but you'll feel like doing so.

Written (from Shakespeare's play) and directed by Kenneth Branagh. Rated PG

Use Philadelphia as base for amusement parks

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Ask George

Q: I'd like to visit three amusement parks in Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Dorney Park, Hershey Park and Six Flags. Where should I start my trip, or what city would be good as a base of operations?

A: Dorney Park is in Allentown, Pa.; Hershey Park is in Hershey, Pa.; and Six Flags Great Adventure is in Jackson, N.J. One option is to fly into Harrisburg, Pa., which is 12 miles from Hershey, and work your way east to Allentown and then to Jackson. You could also use Philadelphia as your base of operations, since Hershey is about two hours west and Allentown about an hour and 15 minutes west of Philadelphia, and Six Flags is an easy 45-minute drive east from there, as well.

Q: I was staying in a hotel recently and noticed they were offering to sell the mattress (a new one, not the actual one I was sleeping on) and other things to their guests. The mattress was very comfortable, but I couldn't decide if it was a good deal or not. Any advice?

A: Buying a mattress can be even more annoying and confusing than buying a new car, since each retailer has different model names for the same mattress, making comparison shopping impossible. Plus, some retailers use bait-and-switch or high-pressure sales techniques. Several hotels, including the Four Seasons chain, have begun selling mattress sets to customers by popular demand. In general, these are indeed good buys since they're offered at wholesale prices.

New York's Palace Hotel sells its mattresses, which are Sealy Posturepedic plush tops, for $599 per set, queen size, or $699, king size (call Contract Furniture Supply at 860-767-4483 for an order form). Since these mattresses are just one grade below Sealy's top-of-the-line Crown Jewel model, which usually costs more than $1,000, I'd say this is a great deal. The only downside: delivery takes about three weeks.

Q: We're visiting Miami and would like to make a side trip to Key West. Do you recommend driving or flying?

A: Probably the cheapest and most relaxing way is to take the bus. Greyhound offers service three times a day (four times on Friday and Sunday) directly to and from Miami International Airport, Concourse E, lower level, and also connects with the Amtrak station in Miami and other downtown Miami locations. The trip takes four hours and 15 minutes and costs $30 one way, slightly higher on weekends and holidays. For information, visit: http://keysshuttle.com or call (305) 296-9072 or (800) 410-KEYS.

Q: Thanks to your information, I used Council Travel last summer to book a flight to Indonesia. This summer I will be returning to Indonesia in late July. Council Travel is holding one possible flight, but it is "the flight from hell." Unfortunately I have lost the list of other reputable consolidators you recommended. Could you please reprint them, particularly any that specialize in Asian travel.

A: A good bet would be CMM at (800) 458-6663. They sell mostly through travel agents, but they'll quote you a price on the phone and they're affiliated with Japan Airlines so you can be sure they're legitimate. They quoted me a price of $950 RT midweek from JFK to Jakarta in mid-July. I checked on travelocity.com for the same dates and got a fare of $3,300 RT, so this is a bargain. You might also try your luck with a travel auction site. Here is my list of some other reliable consolidators. For future reference, you can find this list online at http://home.digitalcity.com/newyork/travel/tips.dci and then click on "Airfare Consolidators."
